THE WAR IN FRANCE.

A French Protest Against the Bombardment of Paris—German Fire Slackened on Friday—The Parisians Still Undaunted.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—The French Foreign Office has protested against the bombardment of Paris, on the ground that it was commenced without the formal notification required by the usages of civilized warfare.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 13.—The Prussian fire has slackened; the French reply continues weak.

BORDEAUX, Jan. 14.—Advices from Paris to the 12th have been received. The bombardment continues. The population were undaunted.

Thursday's Bombardment of Paris—A Terrible Rain of Shells—The Outside Forts Showing Signs of Distress.

[The following appeared in our Sunday edition.]

LONDON, Jan. 14.—Advices from the army investing Paris have been received up to Thursday. On that day the bombardment of the city was very effective.

BRUSSELS, Jan. 12.—The bombardment of Paris yesterday was terrible. The whole district south of a line drawn through Portemaillot, Champ de Mars, Hotel des Invalides, Luxembourg, and Fort de Bicêtre is reached with a rain of shells. The other portions of the city are perfectly safe. The forts outside of the city show signs of distress.

Sixteen Thousand French Soldiers Prisoners—French View of the Result at Le Mans—Bourbaki's Operations in the East—A Break Near Havre.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 14.—The Second Army took 16,000 of CHANZY's force prisoners, from the 6th to the 12th inst., and captured twelve cannon and mitrailleuses.

BORDEAUX, Jan. 14.—A dispatch from Laval, Jan. 13, says that DE CHAUZY is retreating to new positions in excellent order. The corps of JAURELBERRY crossed the River Sarthe on Thursday, fighting all the time with three divisions of MECKLENBURG's Army.

A dispatch from Gen. BOURBAKI, at Onans, reports that the French have carried the villages of Arcy and Saint Marie, and that his forces are gaining ground. Dijon, Gray, Lure and Vesoul have been reoccupied.

HAVRE, Jan. 14.—The Prussians at Dieppe have exacted a requisition of 50,000 francs. The French force operating in the field for the defense of Havre had an encounter with the enemy at Bournesville, at the end of which they retired in good order.

Gloomy Advices From Le Mans—Chanzy Rallies His Troops and Retires in Good Order.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—The Grand Duke of MECKLENBURG telegraphs to his wife as follows:

"We advanced today north of Le Mans without fighting. Our vanguard has crossed the Sarthe."

Prince FREDERICK CHARLES announces that a portion of the Army of the Loire is retreating on Alencon, and the rest toward Laval.

Gen. CHANZY rallied his disordered troops near Le Mans, and is retreating in good order.

Le Mans and St. Cornelle Entered Simultaneously by the Germans—Large Quantity of Stores Captured—Different Accounts.

[The following appeared in our Sunday edition.]

LONDON, Jan. 14.—The Germans entered Le Mans at noon of Thursday. They were simultaneously successful at St. Cornelle.

LONDON, Jan 12.—The Duke of MECKLENBURG telegraphs to his wife from Montfort, Department of the Sarthe, on the 12th, that before a severe engagement at St. Cornelle we reached the river near Savign l'Evêque, seven miles north-east from Le Mans, with small loss. We have taken 1,000 prisoners."

LONDON, Jan. 12—4 P. M.—Le Mans was taken, and is now occupied by the Third and Tenth Prussian Corps. A great quantity of stores were taken by the Germans, both at Le Mans and St. Cornelle.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 14.—The Germans have made the following official report:

In the battles near Le Mans we captured twelve guns and 1,800 prisoners. M. GAMBETTA was present at the beginning of the action, but he saved himself by early flight.

A Line of Advance Secured for the German Reinforcements—The Siege of Giles Raised—Bismarck's Reply to Luxembourg—A Peace Movement.

[The following appeared in our Sunday edition.]

LONDON, Jan. 14.—The capture by the Germans of the fortified town of Perrone is regarded as very important in military circles, as it secures a line of advance for the German reinforcements.

The Germans have raised the siege of Givet on the Belgian border.

Count VON BISMARCK's reply to SERVAIS, the Minister of State of Luxembourg, has been received and made public. The tone is conciliatory. The Count proposes that the Duchy appoint the German Consul as mediator.

BRUSSELS, Jan. 14.—The Belgian Cabinet has earnestly sought to extract a universal peace from the London Conference about to assemble.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

Release of Fenian Prisoners—The New Naturalization Act—A Turkish Naval Station.

[The following appeared in our Sunday edition.]

LONDON, Jan. 14.—It is reported that the political prisoners, LUBY, O'LEARY, MCCAFFERTY, POWER and THOMAS BURKE, who have recently been confined at Dublin, have been released unconditionally. They will sail from Queenstown to-morrow in the steam-ship Russia.

SPANISH AFFAIRS.

The Financial Situation—Speech and Suggestions of the Minister of Finance—The Relations of France and Spain—Spain and the United States.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MADRID, Sunday, Dec. 18, 1870.

About 5½ today, the Minister of Finance ascended the tribune to make his promised statement. The following is a summary of his speech and of the projet de loi which he presented to the Cortes:

THE SITUATION.

I acknowledge, said the Minister, that the situation of the Treasury is difficult, and that it is not without reason that it gives serious concern to the nation. The debt on the 12th of this month amounted to 1,271,000,000 of reals, which are due to the navy, to the holders of acting contracts, to the interest on the debt and to various other creditors who are clamoring to be paid. With regard to the interest on the debt falling due on the 31st of December, it is clear that the State is bound to pay it, for it is a sacred debt. I am endeavoring to find means of paying the interest on the exterior debt, and to prepare for that of the interior. It is time to abandon the system of loans. We must call in everything that is due to the Treasury. Loans offering a high rate of interest tend to reduce the amount of disposable capital requisite for the operations of commerce, industry and agriculture. The evil is great, but it is not without remedy. In order to cover the deficit, rentes must be created for the Treasury equal to those which exist in England and Germany. Custom-house duties, tobacco and stamps must be made to furnish them. In the two countries referred to, consumption and private incomes are very highly taxed. The fortune of every man being known, it is easy to compel every one to contribute in an equitable manner to the public charges.

COVERING THE DEFICIT.

To cover the deficit, we must exact a larger amount of taxation, decrease the expenditure and introduce reforms in the budget. I am not in a position to present a budget; and if I were the Cortes would have no time to discuss it. With regard to my plans, let me here declare that I shall only touch the public debt with the concurrence and authorization of the bondholders. The budget of expenses will amount to 2,200,000,000 of reals and that of receipts to 1,500,000,000. The probable increase of the public revenues permits the hope that the budget of receipts will reach the sum of two milliards. The two hundred millions of probable deficit may be made up by the excess of receipts over the expenses of future budgets. The sums due to the Treasury amount to 800,000,000. The credits have not been paid. There remain 170,000,000 of nominal Treasury bonds which are unsold, and which are connected with the loan of a milliard contracted by MARTINEZ OLIVA with the Bank of Paris, and the bilateral contract which will continue to exist until the 30th of December next. It is not my business to modify it, and I am ignorant whether the Bank of Paris will take the 170,000,000 of Treasury bonds remaining on hand.

EMISSION OF BONDS.

I recognize the necessity of paying the sums due to the clergy, to persons retired on pensions, and the contractors for public works. I propose, therefore, an emission of 800,000,000 of reals in Treasury bonds, bearing an annual interest of twelve per cent. The holders of these new securities, if they are not paid when they fall due, will have the right to give them to the Public Treasury in payment of their taxes. These bonds will be guaranteed by the sale of the copper mines of Riotinto, the revenue produced by tobacco and the Crown domains.

NEW PROJET DE LOI.

The following is the projet de loi which I submit to the approbation of the Constituent Chamber:

ARTICLE I. The dispositions relative to the floating debt are modified as follows:

1. The maximum of the floating debt cannot exceed the third of the budget of expenditure.

2. The interest of the Treasury bonds which represent the floating debt are fixed at twelve per cent. per annum.

3. If these Treasury bonds are not paid when they fall due, they will be received in lieu of a third of all the taxes payable to the State.

4. The State can purchase from the holders of bonds their securities by public adjudication, or employ them in making payments.

ARTICLE II. The Minister of Finance is authorized to take all the necessary measures to insure the payment of the whole of the taxes, and to effect all the compensations and agreements required for the liquidation of the debts of the Treasury.

OBSERVATIONS.

Although this letter is somewhat long, I must add a few brief observations. The Minister already acknowledges a deficit of 1,271,000,000 on the 12th of December. He declares that the system of loans is deplorable for the country, and he launches, nevertheless, his little loan of nine hundred millions plus the 170,000,000 which remain to be placed, if the Bank of Paris replies on the 31st December that it does not want them. It has a right to do so, according to the terms of the contract. The Minister, moreover, has not declared that the payment of the exterior and interior debt is assured. He has contented himself with saying that he will endeavor to find the means of paying them, which amounts just to this: "If I place a milliard of Treasury bonds, I will pay them; if not, I shall endeavor to come to some understanding with creditors of the State. In place of money they will be offered Treasury bonds, if the latter are not sold."

FRANCE AND SPAIN.

Replying to an interpellation, the Minister of Foreign Affairs declared that the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, in his official reports, always spoke of the Government of the National Defense, and not of the Republic, and that foreign Ambassadors had merely recognized the Government of the National Defense and not the Republic. M. FIGUERAS rose and declared that there was in France too much patriotism. These words of the orator excited the laughter of the majority, on which M. FIGUERAS exclaimed in a loud and menacing tone: "Yes, French patriotism is far superior to that of the majority in this Chamber, for it does not go to foreign Courts to beg for a King." [Loud applause from the opposition. Protestations from the majority.]

SPAIN AND AMERICA.

M. BUGALLAL inquired of the Minister of Foreign Affairs the present position of the diplomatic relations between the United States of America and Spain. M. SAGASTA replied that in his opinion the message of Gen. GRANT contained nothing to inspire uneasiness in Spain. The claims of American citizens were the subject of amicable communications between the two Governments. The Spanish Government had consented to the nomination of a mixed Commission to settle the amount of the indemnity to be granted to the Americans who had suffered damage. Out of the twenty-three who had put in claims, the Minister believed that there were but three who could establish them.

THE HOUSE OF SAVOY.

Counts, Dukes, and Kings.

Great changes and electric facts follow at each other's heels so fast nowadays that people have scarcely time to moralize on one of them before the next comes to outdo it or lessen its effect. The sudden rise of Prussia in Central Europe was still astonishing the world when the thunder-cloud overshadowing all France came to eclipse it; and even now, while men gaze on that last astounding spectacle, one more change, not less notable, perhaps, than any of them, passes slowly over the field of southern Europe.

A few days ago, on the 1st of this month, VICTOR EMMANUEL marched into the Eternal City for the first time as King of Rome; Italy; and at the same hour his son AMADEUS was entering Madrid as King of Spain. In the Pazzi of the Savoy-Carignans, that 1st of January, 1871, will certainly be regarded as a very memorable day and date. Their fortunes, like those of the HOHENZOLLERNS, have risen by the same stroke and military drilling—the "old, old fashion"—still shaping the order of human progress in a remarkable degree.

THE FIRST OF THE SAVOYARDS.

The race of those two peninsular Kings rose, or came into the light of history, about the middle of the eleventh century, in the country of ridges, gorges and torrents that slopes down to the confines of France from the highest peaks of the Alps, those in the neighborhood of Mont Blanc, and once bore the name of Sabaudia. The first of the Savoyards was HUMBERT, surnamed the "White-handed"—for the old genealogists are rather particular—who was made Count of Burgundy by CONRAD the Salique, Emperor of Germany, when the latter took that country from King RUDOLPH. We are also told that the Savoyard Counts were subsequently known as Counts of MAURIENNE, a difficult and somewhat barren tract traditionally regarded as the "cradle" of the family. The historian DUHANDI and others say these Counts soon came, in the way of marriage alliance, to be Marquises of SUSA, a fortress on the Piedmont side of the great ridge guarding one of those lofty passes which seem to be expressed in the Celtic word Sabaudia, though the Princess BULGIOJOSA, after some old writers, rather thinks it meant Salus Pat. At any rate, these Savoyards were keepers of the Alpine passes on that ground, taking toll of all travelers, no doubt, and performing many other things which their historians have left out of the record. HUMBERT and his successors made their history in the midst of a swarm of chiefs whose doings were as wild and rough as the ridges, spurs and precipitous roadways of the districts they covered or contested with one another—the Counts of PROVENCE, GENEVOIS and TURIN, the Marquises of IVREA, MONTFERRAT and SALUZZO, with several others of lesser name—all "good men of their hands," but none so distinguished as our Savoyards—a long-headed and prize-fighting race from the first, such as Europe found them in after ages. The Alpine gate-keepers of Maurienne and Susa were widely known, and had royal alliances on all sides—in Burgundy, France, Swabia, Germany, England. In 1228 ELEANOR of Savoy was wife of HENRY III. of England; and in 1246 HENRY built the Savoy palace in the Strand for her relations and followers. In all other parts of Europe the men of that Alpine family were distinguished for their military genius in war, and their governing ability as Churchmen.

A SAVOYARD POPE.

From the time of HUMBERT, in 1003, to 1416, the male fief of Savoy had nineteen Counts—a line which, says Cavallere GALLENGA, "was never known to produce a craven, an idiot or a fainéant prince;" adding, "it may be safely said that there was, on the whole, nowhere a better-behaved or more thrifty or orderly house." The nineteenth Count was AMADEUS VIII.—the ALFRED or "Great Elector" of Savoy, and the most long-headed of that long-headed race. He was the first Duke of his line, receiving that title, in 1416, from the Emperor of Germany. Following the policy of his house, he meddled in the affairs of his neighbors, and made himself a great arbiter of difficulties. He did more—he became a Pope—one of the most curious biographical facts on record. During the great Western schism of the Church, he abdicated in 1434 in favor of his son LOUIS, and retired to the monastery of Ripaille, on the Lake of Geneva, where he remained for five years, till the Council of Basle, deposing Pope EUGENE IV., in 1439, chose the old swordsman of Savoy to be head of the Church as FELIX V! The Duke of MILAN, Visconti, exhorted him to march on Rome and drive out EUGENE; but AMADEUS would not incur such a scandal. Sustained by the Western Bishops, he held his pontificate for ten years, and then made a merit of abdicating once more—abdication is an old custom in the Savoyard house—at the request of the Emperor FREDERICK III., retaining, however, the rank of Cardinal Saint CYRIEN. This able Count-Duke-Pope-Cardinal proceeded in uniting the fief of Savoy with that of Susa or Achaia, on the other side, which had belonged to a kindred branch of his house, and giving to the whole the order of a regular State, governed by good laws, and especially capable of maintaining a force of 30,000 combatants, on an emergency.

LOOKING TOWARD ITALY.

For a long time the Savoyard Counts had tried to win their way northward against the Swiss, and had taken Valais and other tracts round the Lake of Geneva. They had also tried to enlarge themselves on the sides of Burgundy and Provence. But the Swiss, when they became a Mountain Confederacy, beat them back, as they had beaten off the Hapsburgers; and when France had "annexed" Burgundy, that road also was barred. So the Dukes who came after AMADEUS VIII. turned their faces to the warmer fields of Italy and those rivers which, running down through the grand Alpine amphitheatre of Piedmont, seemed to marshal them the way they ought to go. But they found it a very hard and difficult road to journey upon.

CONTESTS WITH THE FRENCH.

In the first place, LOUIS XI. having turned Burgundy and other fiefs into provinces, had leisure to look after Savoy; and, being connected with it by marriage alliance and other interests, he kept it under French control for thirty years, till his death in 1483. In the next place, his son, CHARLES VIII., began in 1494 a series of excursions across the Alps, which for the next sixty-five years, up to the peace of Chateau Cambresis in 1559, kept Piedmont in a state of torment. Readers of mediæval history may, or may not, remember those bewildering campaigns of CHARLES VIII., LOUIS XII. and FRANCIS I., struggling mainly for Naples and the Milanese; this last being, in its time, the "prize-fighting stage," which Flanders afterward became. The Piedmontese Dukes did what they could to stand well with "both their houses," or the strongest of them. But the exasperations of FRANCIS I. did not allow him to hear reason at all times; and in 1536, he led a fierce assault on Savoy, then ruled by the unlucky CHARLES III. At the same time the Bernese were driving the Savoyards out of Gex, Vaud and part of Chablais—capturing Chillon and setting free the poetically memorable Bonivard.

FIRST FALL OF SAVOY.

When FRANCIS forced his way by Mont Cenis into Piedmont, CHARLES V. and his Imperialists came to the rescue, the Italian Princes taking different sides, as usual. FRANCIS I., being hard pressed, asked help from Sultan SOLYMAN, and a body of Turks came to Italy. The mêlee rolled all over Piedmont, and when Pope PAUL III. stopped it, the French and Imperialists held the country, each occupying about half of its strong places. This state of things continued for over twenty years longer, CHARLES III. and his family being in the meantime landless wanderers in Europe. The heir of the Savoy Dukedom, EMANUEL PHILIBERT, became commander for CHARLES V. in Flanders, where he gained the great battle of St. Quentin, against the French, in 1550, at which period those royal disturbers, FRANCIS and CHARLES V., were in their coffins, as was also their victim, Duke CHARLES III.

EMANUEL PHILIBERT.

At the peace of Chateau Cambresis EMANUEL PHILIBERT got back his inheritance, and he is remembered in history as the great "restorer" of Savoy. He rebuilt his forts in the passes and raised an army, recruited in the manner of a militia from the people at large—about a million and a half in number. The sometime commander of the "Spanish infantry" knew his business. His reign was the reign of "drill," and one of his remarkable orders was "silence in the ranks," on the field of battle—a saturnine Spanish fashion—but a good one. He created schools and a university, and made Turin, with its 17,000 inhabitants, his fixed capital. He persecuted the Waldenses—Spanish in that respect also;—but as they made excellent soldiers he was not too severe with them. He died in 1580, leaving his son CHARLES EMANUEL to boast that he had "as many soldiers as subjects."

MORE FRENCH CONTESTS.

CHARLES EMANUEL made use of his great army to keep his neighbors in a state of turmoil. Pope URBAN VIII. said "the trumpets of Savoy did not allow Italy to rest." In 1610 CHARLES agreed with HENRY IV. to cede Savoy to France, in return for French help to take Lombardy. RAVAILLAC disconcerted that policy. But the next Duke, VICTOR AMADEUS, pursued it, won by the promises of Cardinal RICHELIEU, who wished to bound France on the east by the High Alps. But the Imperialists were too strong to allow it, and a series of baren contests followed. By the treaty of the Pyrenees, in 1659, both Powers drew back from the wasted fields of Piedmont, when they had a short respite. But LOUIS XIV. made another Alpine uproar, and his Generals, the Cattinats and Vendomes, renewed the old story of FRANCIS I. Piedmont was fought over and trampled, as usual, till the strength of LOUIS XIV. became exhausted; and the Treaty of Utrecht, in 1713, compensated the Savoyards by raising Duke VICTOR AMADEUS II. to the rank of King of Sicily. By another move, the "Quadruple Alliance" made him, in 1718, King of Sardinia, instead; and the power of Austria was left predominant in Italy.

SARDINIA.

Sardinia continued the prize-fighting policy of Savoy. In 1733 VICTOR AMADEUS II., sided by the French, took the Duchy of Milan, but was obliged to surrender it at the peace of Vienna in 1735, keeping only Novara and Tortosa. Under the reign of VICTOR AMADEUS III., who succeeded in 1773, Turin had a population of 70,000—"a drumming and bell-ringing community." This King spent nearly all his revenue on his army, and was always talking of the King of Prussia, FREDERICK II. His two daughters were married—one to the Count of PROVENCE, the other to the Duke of ARTOIS—both subsequently Kings of France.

THE STORM OF 1793.

The quiet Sardinians were in danger of forgetting the fierce old activities of their race, when the French revolution came to rouse them, along with the rest of the world. In 1792 the Alps felt another storm, and Savoy and Nice became parts of France. VICTOR AMADEUS joined the Allies and received subsidies from England. In 1796 BONAPARTE passed through the Valley of the Sorniole, dividing and beating his Austrian and Sardinian opponents, and, by the Treaty of Paris, dismantling Piedmont. VICTOR died in 1796, leaving five sons; with the last of whom his immediate line came to an end in 1831.

In 1798 CHARLES EMANUEL IV. went away to the Island of Sardinia, leaving Piedmont to become a portion of France. In 1802 he abdicated and went to Rome, where he died in a Jesuit convent in 1819.

In 1815 it was a changed world, and the King of Sardinia, VICTOR EMMANUEL I., got back his kingdom, increased by the indignant little State of Genoa, getting also ten millions of indemnity money from France, and the reversion of Parma and Piacenza, on the extinction of their BOURBONS. But he returned, like those BOURBONS, "remembering nothing and forgetting nothing." He restored old ways and customs, and ignored everything brought about since 1792. But his Piedmontese had grown French in the interim, and had got ideas of progress. In 1820 they demanded a new Constitution and a march on Lombardy. But as he had promised to LAYBACH to do no such things, he being childless, abdicated in favor of his childless brother, CHARLES FELIX. The latter, being then at Modena, had his distant cousin, CHARLES ALBERT, of Carignan—descended from their common ancestor, CHARLES EMANUEL I., (1630,)—to act as Regent. The latter, who had been educated at Paris, and had served in the French Army, was a man of liberal ideas; and yielding to the persuasions of those about him, he proclaimed a "Constitution" from the palace balcony at Turin, in 1821. This was promptly disavowed by CHARLES FELIX; and CHARLES ALBERT went to Spain, where he joined the Duke of ANGOULEME in putting down the "Constitutionalists." This was calculated to mollify the feelings of King CHARLES FELIX; and the Prince was allowed to retire and live in Piedmont.

SAVOY CARIGNAN.

In 1831 the new line of SAVOY CARIGNAN began with CHARLES ALBERT, who found himself bewildered between the enthusiasm of "Young Italy" and the warnings of the Austrians, and did not know, as he himself said, which to fear most—"the daggers of the Carbonari or the chocolate of the Jesuits." He was called Re Tentenna, (King Shilly-Shally) not being able to perceive that popular enthusiasm could do everything against the Austrian "Quadrilateral." But when PIUS IX. had pronounced for Italy and incurred the hostility of the Austrians, and when Rome, Florence and Naples had got constitutions, and especially when France in 1848 became a republic, he "put on the red cap," as he expressed it, and crossed the Ticino, hoping much from the popular spirit both in France and Italy. But the defeats of Custoza and Novara blasted the expectations of Italy, and drove CHARLES ALBERT into exile. He died at Oporto in 1849.

THE KINGDOM OF ITALY.

On the accession of VICTOR EMMANUEL II. the cause of Italy was taken out of the hands of the people and bound up with the policy of NAPOLEON III., who restored the Papacy and brought Savoy round to the old order of royal progress. The assistance of LA MARMORA's army in the Crimean contest, under the treaty of 1854, predisposed the Emperor to undertake the war of Lombardy—though it is possible not to believe that the man of traditions remembered the old occupation of Savoy and Nice, and meant to have them again. The hoodwinking prudence shown in that acquisition diminished the glory of the French achievement in Italy—an achievement which had already suffered detraction on account of its sudden stoppage.

The Treaty of Villafranca, which gave Lombardy to Sardinia, left the Italian Duchies at the mercy of events, such as quickly overtook them. In 1860 GARIBALDI landed in Sicily with a thousand men, drove the Neapolitan troops out of the island, and, following them to the mainland, advanced with the motliest army of modern times to liberate Naples. How King VICTOR then came down with an army to stop the enthusiasm at that point, prevent any marching on Rome, and get rid of his Lieutenant with thanks, is in everybody's remembrance. The campaign of Naples was cut short, like that of Lombardy, and both were followed by a vast amount of patriotic discontent in Italy. GARIBALDI was not needed for the Duchies. Their old Governors disappeared, and left them in that state of Fielons for which they had yearned so long.

GOOD HELP FROM KING WILLIAM.

In 1866 the alliance of Italy with Prussia in the wonderful Seven Weeks' War, obtained for VICTOR EMMANUEL the last piece of peninsular ground remaining to Austria—Venice and the "Quadrilateral." It would have been the glory of King WILLIAM to make the transfer with his own hand. But the collision of Austrian and French Emperors prevented that; and such a disappointment would probably tend to produce much of that coldness of manner visible in the military determinations of Prussia.

But, perhaps, if WILLIAM was not able to give to his late ally the "City of Lagoons," he has helped him to Rome, by putting the old Warder of the Eternal City out of the way. ALBERT rules, the sword won for the SAVOY-CARIGNANS, who, in spite of all their dreams and anticipations, may well be surprised to see themselves so elevated. Fortune seems to have had so much to do with these changes, that those most concerned in them may well fear that this is only the beginning of the end and, that her work on the European Continent is not yet half done.

VICTOR EMMANUEL II., by his wife ADELAIDE, of Austria, has had six children: CLOTILDE MARIA THERESA, born 1843, wife of Prince NAPOLEON; HUMBERT, Prince of Piedmont, born 1844; AMADEUS, (King of Spain,) born 1845; ODDO EUGENE, Duke of Montferrat, born 1846; MARIA PIA, born 1847, and CHARLES ALBERT, Duke of Chablais, born 1851. The King himself is fifty years old.

THE STARVED CHILD.

An Unnatural Mother—Verdict Against the Prisoner—She is Committed.

The inquest on the body of ANNIE WANKO, or Deekman, which was commenced by Coroner TEWKSBURY, at Dutch Kills, on Saturday, was concluded yesterday evening, and resulted in a verdict against the unnatural parent. It seems from the testimony, which was voluminous, that Mrs. DOREIS DEEKMAN, the mother of ANNIE, since her marriage to Mr. DEEKMAN, about a year since, has systematically starved and ill-treated her stepchild, the avowed purpose of getting rid of her. All the witnesses testified to the most inhuman treatment, willful neglect and actual starvation. Most of them had remonstrated with the mother, but she seemed to have no soul. Mrs. MEYER testified that she had often seen the mother strike the girl; that when she first became ill she was bright and rently healthy and robust; that her husband and herself had remonstrated with both Mr. and Mrs. DEEKMAN for ill-treating the child to no effect; that often on the coldest morning she had seen her almost entirely made in the yard; that the mother had often threatened, in her presence, to "starve the life out of her." Mrs. LAGG, a very intelligent English lady, testified that she saw the mother knock ANNIE down only a day or two before her death, with a stick of wood, while she was in her (Mrs. DOUGLASS') house begging for bread, and then kick her down stairs, the child at the time not having strength to arise. At another time she dragged the girl around by her hair, tearing large bunches from her head. On the day of her death, she saw her standing by the stove, with one arm around it entirely naked, begging for something to eat, and the inhuman mother dragged the child from its place, and ordered her to stand in a cold room without anything for its covering, without a bed even of straw to lie upon, or even a chair. A few hours later the child was found there dead. The screams of the girl could be heard through the entire neighborhood, while its brutal mother and her less brutal step-father, were whipping it. The neighbors were accustomed to give the child food, but whenever the mother would hear of it she would punish her. The child has often been seen to pick bits of bread and meat from the street and eat them, and also to steal things from the baker's; but no one complained of her, knowing the circumstances. Mr. DRUMMOND, who boarded with the family a short time, corroborated this testimony, and said further that the husband also ill-used and abused the child. The body seemed to be nothing but skin and bones, and the post-mortem examination by Drs. DENSLAN and BYRN, revealed the fact that nothing was found in the stomach or intestines, and that the child starved to death. The following was the verdict: We find that the said ANNIE DEEKMAN came to her death by starvation, and willful neglect and abuse at the hands of her mother, DOREIS DEEKMAN.

One witness swore to having seen the mother choke the child till its face was black. The strangest part of this strange story is that when she child begged to be saved, and pleaded with the neighbors to take her away, no one was found willing to interfere. Neighbors made complaint before a Magistrate, not even when they saw that the girl was being daily killed by the inhuman mother. Great credit is due Coroner TEWKSBURY, who so ably conducted the inquest, and who warmed out from unwilling witnesses the facts in this case. The Coroner fully committed, without bail, DOREIS DEEKMAN to await the action of the Grand Jury. The child was eleven years old.

A few hours later the child was found there dead. The screams of the girl could be heard through the entire neighborhood, while its brutal mother and her less brutal step-father, were whipping it. The neighbors were accustomed to give the child food, but whenever the mother would hear of it she would punish her. The child has often been seen to pick bits of bread and meat from the street and eat them, and also to steal things from the baker's; but no one complained of her, knowing the circumstances. Mr. DRUMMOND, who boarded with the family a short time, corroborated this testimony, and said further that the husband also ill-used and abused the child. The body seemed to be nothing but skin and bones, and the post-mortem examination by Drs. DENSLAN and BYRN, revealed the fact that nothing was found in the stomach or intestines, and that the child starved to death. The following was the verdict: We find that the said ANNIE DEEKMAN came to her death by starvation, and willful neglect and abuse at the hands of her mother, DOREIS DEEKMAN.

One witness swore to having seen the mother choke the child till its face was black. The strangest part of this strange story is that when she child begged to be saved, and pleaded with the neighbors to take her away, no one was found willing to interfere. Neighbors made complaint before a Magistrate, not even when they saw that the girl was being daily killed by the inhuman mother. Great credit is due Coroner TEWKSBURY, who so ably conducted the inquest, and who warmed out from unwilling witnesses the facts in this case. Declarations by Prominent Officers of their Loyalty to Spain—Death of an Opera Singer by Yellow Fever.

HAVANA, Jan. 14.—A large number of the most prominent, wealthy, and educated natives of Cuba publish a long article in the Voz de Cuba, today, proclaiming their unaltered adhesion to Spain and to the Spanish cause. There is much excitement in this city in consequence of the publication of the article, and especially owing to the character of the signers, several of whom had been suspected to be in former days sympathizers with the revolution and hopeful of its success.

HAVANA, Jan. 13.—Signora RUBINI, prima donna of the Italian Opera, at the Albion Theatre, died of yellow fever this evening. She was a member of the newly-engaged opera troupe.

The Steamer Hornet Lands her Cargo—It is Immediately Captured Upon Several of the Crew Killed.

HAVANA, Jan. 15.—The steamer Hornet landed her cargo on the 12th at Punto Brava, near Manati. The Spanish troops arrived shortly afterward and captured her entire cargo. They killed several of the expeditionists, and are in pursuit of the remainder. The officers of the Hornet, seeing the state of affairs on the shore, immediately went to sea.

"It is the desire and intention of the Department Commander to inaugurate and prosecute a vigorous, persistent and relentless Winter campaign against the Final and Yuma branches of the Apache tribes of Indians."

The order also causes to be established a depot of supplies near the centre of the Final country, and directs commanders of scouting expeditions to provide arms for civilians who desire to accompany them.

STEAM-BOAT DISASTER.

A Miscellaneous Boat Burned on "Shoo Fly" Bar—Passengers Compelled to Leap Overboard—Thirty Persons Supposed to be Drowned—Names of Some of the Lost and Saved.

MEMPHIS, Jan. 15.—Steamer T. L. McGill, from St. Louis, for New-Orleans, was burned on Shoo Fly Bar at 8 o'clock last night. The fire broke out at, Owing to a gale prevailing, the flames spread rapidly, and the passengers had barely time to rush to the bow and plunge into the water before the fire was upon them. To add to the horror of the scene the weather was intensely cold, and many who plunged into the river were chilled and sunk to rise no more. The survivors give imperfect and confusing reports. The boat had been aground for two days and had unloaded 200 tons of her freight in order to get over the bar. She was laden with 800 tons of general merchandise, including pork and coal-oil. Just as the passengers were preparing to retire an alarm of fire was raised, and a general stampede ensued. The steamers St. Francis and Ann White, which had passed her, were several miles above, but, seeing the fire, turned back and arrived in time to render valuable assistance. The H. O. Yeager, lying near by, also rendered assistance. The Ann White brought up the following persons, picked up along the shore: Oliver Cottrell, first engineer, of St. Louis; Isaac Austin, stoker; Jerry Larry and C. H. Crane, cooks; Pat. Collins, deck sweep, Moline, Ill.; Wm. O'Brien, roustar, Chicago; David R. Jones and L. Sherman, Ohio; Frank Green, Belvidere, Wis.; Thomas Rogers, cabin boy, Vicksburg; John Black, cabin boy, New-Orleans; Abe McFall, Cairo.

Passengers—W. S. Evill, St. Louis, Mo.; Peter McGevin, St. Louis, Mo.; D. E. French, Moscow, Ky.; Jerry Daily, St. Louis; A. J. M. Colwell, Hickman County, Ky.; Valentine Fox, St. Louis; Wm. Johnson, boy, New-Orleans; Mr. Shingleprex, Milwaukee; C. L. Barnes, Bartlett, Iowa; Michael Keeley, St. Louis; Colored Rousters, Dennis Lewis, George Malone, Port Jones, Alex. Johnson, Al. Fellow, Charles Brown, Henry Hudson, Frank Nelson, Charles Brown, (No. 2,) Henry Clay, Moses Hill, Richard Hill, Samuel Whiling.

It was hoped that Capt. TOMPKINS and Wm. McFARLAND, the first clerk, were saved, but the arrival of the St. Francis to-night gives little encouragement to the thought that they still live. So confused and contradictory are the reports, it is impossible to give an accurate estimate of the number of persons lost, but it is probable that thirty of those on board the steamer when the flames were first discovered are now dead, and that the number includes four women and three children. THOMAS F. EVANS, a hatter, of St. Louis, died soon after he was placed on board the St. Francis, from wounds and exposure. In addition to Capt. TOMPKINS and WILLIAM McFARLAND, the first clerk, who are supposed to be lost, a German and his wife are missing, also a carpenter from St. Louis, who was bound for Greenville, Miss., two women, three children, the colored chamber-maid, and PHILIP LOCK, of Philadelphia, Penn. Mr. EVERETT, of St. Louis, who came here on the St. Francis, says that a man and his wife, who were cabin passengers, floated past them, holding on to the stage plank. As they went by with the current, the woman said to her husband, "I am freezing—let's die together." She then let go the plank, and her husband grasped her, but he was too exhausted to maintain her above the water, and both sunk, locked in each other's embrace. COTTRELL, the engineer, thinks that at least fifte

Christmas in England—Scenes About London—Thoughts of the War—German Insolence Toward England—England's Position—The Prussian Armies.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Thursday, Dec. 29, 1870.

Christmas has been colder than for many years. Never in England have I seen such displays of frost-work. The windows of the railway carriages got covered thick on the 24th; and on one line the bursting of a tire in three places caused the death of several persons. It was curious to see the waiting locomotives at the large stations steaming over fires to keep the pipes from freezing or melt those already frozen. Here in London all the ornamental waters in the parks are covered with a good three inches of ice, and have been thronged every day of the past week, with twenty or thirty thousand people, skating, sliding, enjoying the rare luxuries of from ten to twenty degrees of frost. I have seen but two ladies on skates, one American or Canadian, the other French, but among the men were many excellent skaters. Police were plentiful, and the rough, were absent or orderly. Of the feasting and the charities of the great festival I need not speak. It is understood that every Englishman, pauper, in the workhouse or thief in prison, on this one day of Christmas, has a good dinner of the national roast-beef and plum-pudding. Sir ROBERT CARDEN made an exception against two wretched Britons who had the audacity to pick pockets at the Mansion House. They were sentenced to three months' imprisonment and not to have the usual Christmas dinner. Thirty-eight thousand people went to the Crystal Palace on Boxing Day, in spite of the intense cold and the good skating. The Palace has its pantomime and a full set of holiday festivities for all tastes. The two great theatres—Drury Lane and Covent Garden—have their usual and most gorgeous pantomimes, as have the Surrey and Ashley's, and a few of the East End and suburban houses; but most of the West End houses are content with giving new burlesques. For my part, I shall go as usual to one of the great theatres at the 2 P. M. performance to see a hundred groups of beautiful English children enjoying their fairy-land delights of wondrous transformation scenes and the glories of harlequin and columbine. And the VOKES family, two brothers and three sisters, clever and beautiful, are worth seeing anyhow and anywhere. I saw them first at a music-hall, from which they went straight to Drury Lane, where for more than a year they have been the chief attraction. They are, I believe, the children of a Covent Garden theatrical costumer.

THOUGHTS OF THE WAR.

It is impossible for us to enjoy our Christmas here without thinking of Paris, always so bright and gay at this season—now so solemn and so stern. The bombardment has begun. Pious King WILLIAM opened his Gloria on the extemporized fortresses of Mount Avron. It is a tentative experiment. If he can take this outwork, built since the investment began, he may try on some of the weaker detached forts, and so get at last a position to bombard the city. He will at least amuse his grumbling soldiers and complaining people. But the English correspondents with the besieging army have little faith in the success of this attempt at bombardment. It comes too late. Three months ago a bombardment might have frightened Paris. Now they are long past that, and the French guns and gunners are quite as good as the German. Three months ago there was nothing that could be called a French army. Now there are five—one in Paris, four north, west and south. Three months ago France was almost without rifles and field artillery. Now she has enough of both for a million of men. Three months ago France would gladly have purchased a peace at a very heavy price. Today I do not believe she would pay half as much money, to say nothing of fleet, fortresses, and territory. So much at least is changed. Three months ago the Germans had no idea that Paris could hold them at bay for ninety days, or that France could raise great armies and carry on the war. Now they see that even if Paris were taken and all the armies in the field beaten, there would still be new armies to combat for France and two-thirds of the country still to overrun, ravage, pillage—if not to conquer. The feeling of England today is that the Germans are in more peril than the French, or even the Parisians.

INSOLENCE TOWARD ENGLAND.

And what do you think of the insolence the Germans are showing toward England? Do they wish to compel England to come to the aid of France, and give them an excuse for not carrying out their scheme of conquest? Really, their treatment of English officers, correspondents and ships looks like it. What would you do if the English, say, should sink six American ships, or if American citizens in England were obliged to shelter themselves under French passports? The country wishes very much to know how long its Government is going to meekly submit to these insults. "Oh! for a day of PALMERSTON!" sighs the unhappy subject of a Queen of whom Mr. GLADSTONE is Prime Minister. There seems to be little doubt that these insults to England are premeditated, and have a purpose. Every English traveler in Germany testifies to the bitter feeling which pervades all classes there against England. War with England is openly threatened. They say it is all planned and mapped out, and the country spied out as thoroughly as France was for two years before the present invasion. So is German Switzerland surveyed and mapped for military purposes; and the mouths of the Rhine, which must now be in its entirety, and with all its branches, a German river. France said no to this, and is being crushed. Let England say no; or refuse her assent to the annexation of Luxembourg or Holland, and she will be crushed likewise. That is what they talk about to their English guests in Germany.

ENGLAND'S POSITION.

If England had the will, and the force to back her will, the Eastern question, the Danish question, the Luxembourg question, and the question of the dismemberment of France and the destruction of the balance of power in Europe might be settled. Oh for a will and arm of might! or even a clear head and valiant heart, in such a crisis! England will weakly shilly-shally, dilly-dally, until action is too late. Either France will be crushed and trodden under the heel of the conqueror, who will then be ready with fleet and army to invade and punish England for her unfriendly neutrality, or France will beat and hurl back her invader and be ready to turn upon her cowardly and recreant ally, who has deserted her in her extremity. England sits shivering on the fence, waiting to see which party will be the victor, which it will be safe to join. The Germans hate, the French begin to scorn her. The French comment on the seizure and sinking of the English ships in the Seine is worthy of the national reputation for wit. "England," they say, "should change her motto of 'Dieu et mon droit,' for that of 'Battu et content,'" (licked and happy.) Well, it is none of my business, but I do not see how a proud and gallant people can bear to bear it. And if the reports are true, the seizure of the ships was as cruel and rapacious in manner as if they had been French. The crews were fired upon, and not allowed to get their money or clothing, which were taken by the Germans; and when driven ashore they nearly perished of cold and hunger.

THE GERMAN ARMIES.

The English correspondents, earnestly as they may profess their sympathy with the Prussian cause, cannot always restrain their indignation at the conduct of the troops around them. Thus Capt. HOZIER, in the Times, gives a careful description of an officer whom he saw stealing spoons and forks at a restaurant, while Mr. AUSTIN describes the plunder of all kinds of valuables as becoming so universal that he fears all Germany will become demoralized in regard to the rights of property—that in fact the whole of the invading army will go back, if it ever does go back, accomplished burglars and plunderers. He says the army has perceptibly grown worse from week to week, and if the statements of observers can be relied upon, the property stolen from French occupied towns and villages, and sent home by officers and men, or sold to peddlers who follow the army, must amount to many millions of dollars. And these are the men we have had lauded to the skies as perfect angels in uniform—so intelligent, so upright, so honest, each with a Bible in his knapsack and the ten commandments at his tongue's end, &c. They may not be worse than other armies; but they were said to be so much better! And war itself may be only a way of breaking all the commandments in the most comprehensive and terrible manner. You see that whatever I begin to write about, I come to the war sooner or later—generally sooner. How can I do otherwise? All reading, all conversation is full of it. In every newspaper it is the first and the last thing. The rest is merely skimmed at and hurried over. In the pauses of a dance, between the acts of the play, amid the roars of laughter at the pantomime, the one subject comes up. You so far away, may be able to think and write of other things. Here it is all but impossible. MONADNOCK.

Fighting in Progress—The Question of Supplies—Future Action Toward Germans.

From Our Special Correspondent.

PARIS, Thursday, Dec. 29, 1870.

Fighting has been going on since yesterday morning, and it is reported that Le Bourget, Bondy, and Boulogny, have been taken and are held by the French. I am skeptical, however, in regard to the correctness of the latter of these announcements, and give you the rumor sous toute réserve.

THE QUESTION OF SUPPLIES.

The mortality among the children is said to be very great, but this is to be attributed, I believe, more to the scarcity of fuel than to that of proper nourishment. The best proof I can give you that we are not as yet reduced to starvation point, is to forward you DUVAL'S new scale of prices—increased since Monday last. Plates of meat which up to that day were charged at the rate of only seventy-five centimes are now set down at one franc twenty-five centimes. A dish of vegetables, which in July last cost only thirty centimes, is charged seventy-five centimes, or a little more than double. You can nevertheless get a very good meal at the Boulevard Montmartre establishment (which you must remember, pays a very heavy rent) for about three francs twenty centimes or three francs fifty centimes, including dessert and the usual bottle of wine. This is very little more than you are charged at SIMPSON'S restaurant, on the Strand, London, for a dinner much less varied and without wine. How it is done considering the prices which provisions cost in the market, would puzzle any one not acquainted with DUVAL'S resources. In a general way, I may state the present rates of provisions for the table to be as follows: Beef and mutton, from eight to ten francs per pound; flesh de cheval, 10 francs per pound; mule and donkey flesh, 8 francs per pound; rabbits, 10 to 20 francs, without head or skin; cats from 5 to 10 francs, whole. Dogs vary greatly in price. Rats bring 1 franc 50 centimes to 2 francs. Poultry and butter cannot be quoted, as they are bought with avidity at almost any price. Eggs cost from 20 to 25 sous, and are difficult to be had even at that price. In some restaurants you pay two francs fifty centimes for a mutton chop, and in others six or seven francs for the leg or wing of a chicken. Many persons have kept hen-coops in their apartments, and in this way have been able to supply themselves with poultry and eggs up to the present time. Small birds, such as sparrows and larks, bring from one franc to two francs fifty centimes each, and are not so scarce as might be supposed.

FUTURE ACTION TOWARD GERMANS.

The Germans who have been domiciled in and gaining their livelihood in Paris previous to the war will have a hard time of it when they return here. Under the pretext that they have been serving the Prussian Government as spies, most of our large manufacturers are entering into engagements not to employ German workmen for a period of ten years. I apprehend that these gentlemen will soon repent of their determination, for it is well known that German workmen largely contribute to the manufacture and taste of what are known in commerce as le articles de Paris. They are, moreover, the steadiest and most tractable of the workmen employed by those firms. After the demoralization which has been introduced among the French working classes by such a long period of idleness and dependency as has been consequent on the siege, the masters will miss the services of the sober and well-conducted ouvriers on whose steadiness and skill they could always depend.

Christmas Pictures in England—The Siege of Paris and the War—Moltke's Strategy—The Armies—Effect of the War in Germany—General Results.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Wednesday, Dec. 28, 1870.

If two millions of people in Paris could see the displays of beef and mutton, poultry and game hung up with holly and mistletoe, with decorations and illuminations in every street of London and every town and village in the Kingdom! Poor Paris keeps lent at Christmas tide, but keeps it bravely. All is quiet, all is patient, all Paris they say is resolute. Gen. TROCHU has taken charge of all the food and adopted the entire population as the army of Paris, and all are to be fed and cared for. After three months of siege, never was there, perhaps, at the same season so little suffering. The rich have less of luxury, but the poor and the very poor are better provided for and the food, a good lenten diet, will last as long as I have said, and some who ought to know, say much longer. It will last till the first of April, perhaps; certainly till the first of February.

THE SIEGE OF PARIS.

But the Germans are resolute, and quite determined to fight on all Winter, all Summer, and for ten years, if necessary, to accomplish their objects. They must have Paris. I do not see why; but I suppose they do. They must crush France into submission. They must compel her to make a treaty which they know she will not keep, and cede provinces which she must be severed by force, and which will revolt at the first opportunity. For this the war grows every day more hideous and more horrible. The details of slaughter, rapine, pillage, burning of villages, a wide country covered with glazing corpses, battles day after day along the valley of the Loire, are heartrending to read of. Mr. CARLYLE may like it—I do not. The German Emperor may thank God for it—but I doubt if Germany will have a very merry Christmas. Three members of the German Parliament have just been arrested and imprisoned, charged with treason for disapproving of the forcible annexation of Alsace and Lorraine to Germany. An Englishman has visited Pfalsbourg, the fortress which has stood the longest siege during the war, where he talked with M. ERCKMANN, one of the writers of the famous stories of the wars of the Revolution of '92. M. ERCKMANN is very sure that his beloved province will never become a part of Germany, though it might be neutralized. The rendition of Pfalsbourg, it seems, was not a capitulation. It offered to capitulate provided the garrison were allowed to march out with their arms and join the French army elsewhere. This of course was refused, which they spiked their guns, destroyed their powder, broke gun-carriages and muskets; utterly destroyed everything that could be of any use to the enemy, and then opening their gates said, "walk in, gentlemen, if it pleases you." The Germans, who had had a long and weary siege, walked in, and the two armies thoroughly fraternized and had a general blow-out for three days, when the French were sent off to Germany.

MOLTKE'S STRATEGY.

The Times glorifies the strategy of von MOLTKE in directing the German Armies north and south of him, but finds that at Paris all the ability is on the side of the French. The Germans have made great blunders, and allowed the French to push out their defenses until the royal head-quarters are no longer safe from the French artillery. The Germans have been deceived as to the disposition as well as the power of Paris to defend herself, until now. Months after she was expected to yield, it is found that she is provisioned for months to come, is impregnable to attack, while the Germans have as much as they can do to provision the besieging army. Some of the Germans have been three days without meat. Somebody has found the diary of a private in the One Hundred and Sixth Saxon Regiment. "Order of the day," he writes: "5 A. M., milkless coffee, glutinous strength; 7 to 9 A. M., hunger; 9 A. M., rooting for potatoes; 10 A. M., potato hunt fruitless; 11 A. M., hunger again; midday, dinner of delicious grapes, potatoes and crust of bread; 1 P. M., hunger; supper, hunger over again; 9 P. M., sleep. Hunger. Shells all round. Hunger and hunger again." It could not be much worse in Paris where we are assured there is horse meat for two months still, salt fish not touched, and bread and wine at discretion. Capt. HOZIER wonders and wonders what the German commanders are about, and says, "Paris never showed less signs of yielding"—what he means is—never showed more signs of making a good fight; a fight, I feel sure, you will have had news of before this can reach you. The whole drift of the news from all quarters is in favor of the successful defence of Paris, and there might be great hope for France if the rest of the country were doing half as well as the capital.

THE ARMIES.

Paris has about 250,000 armed men, divided into three armies, under Gens. THOMAS, DUCROT and VINOY. Gen. DUCROT'S army, now nearly two hundred thousand strong, is encamped outside the walls, ready to start out; Gen. VINOY'S, of seventy thousand, has charge of the forts. The whole force has been picked over, and everything done to make it effective. There is an army in Paris, therefore, that may yet make wild work with the army around it, if the Generals of the Provinces do half their duty. The German Generals are hurrying up reinforcements, for they seem, at last, to have found out that the besieged were in greater force, both of men and artillery, than the besiegers. Dr. RUSSELL is politely disgusted at the efforts of philanthropists to put an end to the nervous sufferings of the sensitive King WILLIAM. He says:

"If the good people who are exercising themselves over the war were only to know how their resolutions in public meeting assembled are viewed, they would, perhaps, think less of the beneficial influence they exercise over the belligerents. No one at all acquainted with the French people here imagines they are one whit more disposed to make peace and surrender Alsace and Lorraine than they were. On the other hand, the Germans call out the Landsturm and create two new army corps, adding sixty thousand men to the number they have in the field. All the States north and south are filling up their ranks. And Paris? Well, two months more at least. So that the 14th of February may witness the arrival of the ever-receding day. You must not be displeased at it or sick of it, for the war will go on until France can get no more men to fight for her."

As to "more men," the correspondent of the Telegraph, at Vendome, says:

"Neither of the French armies—neither that under BOURBAKI nor that under CHANZY—is less the worse for wear and tear. I can draw on reinforcements to nearly double their strength; so plentiful are the men at the command of the Government. Many of the soldiers are small of build, but a majority are large-sized, well-grown, athletic fellows. Whole companies together of the 'Mobile' present the appearance of giant men indeed; a good body of them, seen beside one of the old regiments of the line, would appear to be drawn from another race of men. The one great necessity is that these Mobiles should get the habit of standing fire; and as the discipline is not very strict, they acquire this habit slowly. As we have seen in the United States, however, wild troops similarly recruited and organized, the habit is sure to come in the end."

And if Paris, with a population of two millions, can raise and arm five hundred thousand men, what ought France to do?

EFFECTS OF THE WAR ON GERMANY.

We are now and then reminded of the effects of the war upon Germany as well as upon France. Labor is so scarce that the harvests were secured with difficulty, and there is a famine of fuel for want of coal-miners.

In the mining district of Bonn alone, on the outbreak of the war, 60,000 men were employed. Of these, 6,000 were summoned to join the army, leaving 12,000 wives, children and parents who had been dependent on them. At the Saarbrück Government mines, 2,800 out of 19,000 colliers were also drawn off. In Nassau five or six per cent. of the colliers, and in others fifteen per cent., were called to arms, the average being about ten per cent. The families of these men have to be supported by the respective mining companies, benefit societies sharing a part of the burden. The effect of the war does not stop here. On the commencement of hostilities mining operations had in most cases to be restricted, and a few metal mines were entirely closed. The products of the Saarbrück coal mines in August were only a fifth of the usual amount.

GENERAL RESULTS.

As to the moral effects of the war upon those engaged in it, I cannot do better than to give you the observations of an English writer whom I have often quoted with pleasure, Mr. ALFRED AUSTIN, of the Standard:

"Is all to be held fair in war? Certainly we are traveling in the direction of that principle at a very rapid rate. You know my ideas as to at whose door the original guilt of this fearful struggle lies; but I have seen and heard nothing to make me change, or modify them; but the really noble sentiments with which I conceive it was entered upon by the non-aggressors have sadly lost their quality in the course of continued carnage. I do not know that victory is necessarily demoralizing, but protracted fighting is. In spite of their large drop of savage nature, men so thoroughly hate a unassumed condition of bloody struggle, that though they may enter upon it, some with a light and some with a chivalrous heart, it vexes them not to be able to retire from it when they have had enough. Thus, men who commence by fighting with their fists end by fighting with their teeth, and the lines which are supposed in war to divide the fas from the nefas become obliterated. Resistance is at length regarded as an offense against human morals, and desperate patriots are branded, if not treated, as criminals. I fear matters will grow still worse. Indeed, one excess entails another. Every one will tell you how, for the most part, the French who remained in their houses have found their simple presence there a sufficient protection, while those who abandoned their homes have had them wrecked and pillaged. But, constructively, lawful pillaging has a tendency to beget pillaging of a wholly unlawful character; and one hears only too many well-authenticated tales to prove that a vast number of the conquerors have acquired the habit of mind of considering the first everything in the country belongs to them. It was in the genial Autumn when they first swarmed into the charming Vale

THE ACCUSED.

It is expected that the trial will last about a week or ten days. Some seventy witnesses have been subpoenaed in the case. The Cleveland Plain Dealer of Friday evening gives a brief account of the excitement attending the opening of the trial. The prisoner was brought into Court handcuffed. He looked, it says, remarkably well, and was dressed with scrupulous neatness, in a suit of black broad-cloth, with all the accessories that go to make up the toilet of a well-regulated gentlemen. He seemed in good spirits, smiling and conversing pleasantly as he shook hands with his counsel and numerous acquaintances. He is twenty-five years old, rather below medium height, stout built, with a full round face, cleanly shaven with the exception of a black moustache of modest proportions, and has dreamy blue eyes which seem to indicate the very opposite of vindictive passion.

New-Britain, Conn., has voted to accept its city charter by a majority of 1 in a total of 1,041 votes. The opponents of the charter contend that one vote, which was thrown out because it was found folded up with another, should have been counted. This would have made the vote a tie.

The Boston Horticultural Hall lectures were recommenced on Sunday week by an address on the faiths of the infidels by Rev. O. B. FROTHINGHAM. Other lecturers in the course are to be: MARY GREW, one of the oldest of the anti-slavery women; JOHN WEISS, HIGGINSON, ABBOTT, and PORTER, Chiefs of the Free Religious Party; WASSON, conservatively inclined, who will talk about "Labor;" SAMUEL JOHNSON, on "Theodore Parker;" JOHN FISKE, who will seek to tell what Positivism is, and Mr. EMERSON.

A Boston man, who evidently keeps his wife on short allowance, refused to give her money that she might attend the Woman-Suffrage Bazaar, saying that he would not aid the movement in any way. With five cents in her purse, however, she went, determined to contribute that. Walking around the hall in search for something which came within her means, she copied the scales, and, finding the charge for weighing one was just five cents, jumped on and was weighed.

The Commissioners of Fisheries of the State of New-York announce that they are now prepared to furnish black bass, young bullheads, or catfish, white bass and rock bass, roach, perch, sunfish and pike perch, commonly called yellow pike, for stocking waters in any part of this State, free of expense, to all persons who will send some one to receive and take charge of them, as living fish can only be delivered at the State breeding establishment at Caledonia, N. Sandusky, Ohio, claims to have on a window pane in one of its hotels a photograph of a young lady's face, "taken by nature and without the aid of the artist," and so distinct as readily to be recognised by all who had seen the original as that of a young lady residing in New-Orleans, who, with her mother and sister, spent the Summer season at the house, occupying the room in which the window is located, and frequently sitting at it for hours at a time looking out upon the street.

Massachusetts has a ship-master who happened to be at Santa Cruz at a time when no freight offered but a cargo of rum. This he declined to take on any terms, saying that his conscience would not permit, and he returned home in ballast. On his arrival he informed the owners of the circumstances, adding that he was willing to pay them their proportion of the freight money which had been lost by his conduct. They declined this, but care was taken that his voyages should be thereafter so arranged as to avoid all "rum" ports.

In a pleasant letter to an old college classmate, Senator YATES says there are none who so little appreciate high public positions as those who fill them; that the sweetest recollections that come to him in the long waste of memory are those of college days, and that when he reached the House of Representatives in Congress (he had told the boys in college that he would never be seen at the Alleghanies till then) he accomplished what he then aimed at. Now that he is in the Senate, he says his ambition is satisfied, and at the end of this session he will retire into private life, at least long enough for rest and quiet.

CANADA.

Fruits of the Rebellion—Why Union and Confederation—Gratifying Results—Population and Area—Trade, Manufactures and Revenue.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TORONTO, Friday, Jan. 6, 1871.

Thirty-three years ago Canada was in open rebellion, and though but of brief duration, the effect produced upon the material interests of the country was of a very disastrous character. The events of the time referred to naturally retarded the general prosperity, and rolled back the wheels of progress fully more than a decade. If, however, the troubles of 1837-8 were productive of ill results in one sense, they had a happy effect in another, inasmuch as the eyes of the Imperial authorities were opened to the miseries and mismanagement of the past. After much wrangling and disputation, such concessions were made as secured self-government, and the ultimate advancement of the country. But the union of 1840, from which so much was expected, did not realize the anticipations of even its less sanguine promoters. Much difficulty ensued, and it seemed at one time as if the repeal would be necessary to the well-being and contentment of the people; but its friends and supporters struggled on well nigh thirty years through the fiercest political strife that had probably ever been witnessed. Party government was sustained after many a hard battle, and it became at last such an evenly-balanced affair that a dead-lock was imminent. In fact, neither party could secure a working majority, and, finally, confederation was decided on. From this new and more extended union, of course, great results are looked for, but it is questionable if they will meet the expectations formed of them. A trial of three years can scarcely be considered a fair test, as the scheme of confederation must necessarily be incomplete so long as Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia remain out of the union. Still, the results thus far are highly gratifying, and should be sufficient to indicate what may be looked for in the future, either with or without the addition of the three remaining Provinces.

THE DEBT DIVISION.

The public debt of Canada was small at the time of the first union, but immediately afterward the Imperial Government pledged its credit for $7,500,000, which was the beginning of what may now be regarded as our national debt. Since then it has been largely augmented, no less than $61,124,009 having been advanced to railway enterprises throughout the country, and $6,620,848 under the Municipal Loan Fund act. These sums, together with the cost of public works, including the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa, swelled the total debt of old Canada to something like sixty million dollars at the time confederation was carried. To this has to be added the debt of Nova Scotia and New-Brunswick, making in all little short of ninety million dollars as the Dominion debt. By the act of union, however, each Province assumes a certain portion of the debt, and the amount set down to the Dominion is therefore about about seventy-seven and a half millions. This division of the debt has led to a disagreement between Ontario and Quebec, the latter contending that as she had a surplus in the treasury when united to Upper Canada, in 1841, she had a right to be considered so much better than Ontario in the making of the division. The matter came before the arbitrators appointed to apportion the debt, and because two of them refused to entertain the proposition, the third, Judge DAY, who represented Quebec, resigned, but the award has, nevertheless, been made, and Quebec will find no further opportunity of being heard. The apparently large indebtedness of the country does not press heavily on the people, indeed the average rate per head of taxation is less than that of any other country. It is true that the Grand Trunk Railway has failed to pay even a fraction of the interest on its indebtedness to the Government of twenty-three million dollars, and the municipalities have all but repudiated; yet the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec having assumed the last-mentioned debt, it will be collected by some means or other. There can be no question whatever that the money spent on the canals was not thrown away, for it has been the means of surmounting the obstructions which interrupted the navigation of the St. Lawrence and the lakes. When the enlargement of the canals is effected Canada will possess one of the finest chains of water communication on this continent. The Ottawa Buildings, it cannot be denied, stand as a monument of folly, and will be regarded by future generations as the wildest scheme that could have been conceived. How much better it would have been to expend a great part of the cost of those buildings on public works, so as to facilitate inland navigation.

POPULATION AND RESOURCES.

Favored by nature with almost unequaled productiveness, the soil of Canada is capable of maintaining a large population. In 1861 there were 3,090,561 souls, and at the present time it is believed to be nearly four and three-quarter millions, the population of Ontario being over two millions. To have followed the old system the census should have been taken during the present month, but a special act of Parliament was passed last session, which changes the mode of numbering the people, and the census will accordingly be taken in May next. Some people took it into their heads to say that the work was badly done in 1861, but that was not the case, and it is doubtful if it will be done as well under the new system, which appears to be too costly and cumbersome. The Minister of Agriculture is preparing to carry out the work of the census, and has already a large staff of officers engaged. Ontario has an area of 120,000 square miles, and last year added about 28,000 emigrants to its population. Taken altogether the area of the Dominion is 376,037 square miles, to which is now to be added the North-west, with its 2,750,000 square miles. Surely there ought to be "room and verge enough" with so much territory as this. As an agricultural country it has been supposed to be unsurpassed, but there are other resources quite as valuable. For instance, there is the timber and lumber trade, which is much greater than many people imagine; at present the lumber business alone, is worth $15,000,000 annually; 2,000 saw-mills are employed, having a capital of $6,000,000, and a tonnage of 1,500 vessels is engaged during the season of navigation. But the trade of the country is best shown by the official returns, which are as follows for 1869, it being too soon to obtain those of the year just closed:

	Exports. Value.	Imports. Value.	Duty.
Ontario	$20,033,242	$24,346,320	$2,091,322
Quebec	3,225,738	8,946,341	4,221,128
New-Brunswick	4,564,519	6,622,264	690,617
Nova Scotia	5,740,511	7,207,745	1,076,123

It will be seen that the trade is pretty evenly balanced between imports and exports, the imports slightly preponderating. Years ago, the difference in favor of imports was truly alarming, but gradually our merchants have learned to import only what is really needed, and, as a consequence, trade is flourishing. The difference of a few thousand dollars in favor of the importations into this Province is of very little moment indeed, for it is evident that ere long our exports will exceed the imports, particularly now that manufactures are in such a flourishing condition. With regard to manufactures, it may be as well to remark that there are sixty-four manufactories of tobacco in Ontario alone, the total quantity of material used by them 1,317,287 pounds, and 324,604 of other commodities. The duty paid in 1869 was $182,009 90. The manufacture of liquors is also an important branch of business, the annual produce being 2,721,689 gallons, on which duty is paid to the amount of $9,982,801. Beer is manufactured to the extent of 4,000,000 gallons, the duty being payable on the malt used. Petroleum produced 2,799,136 gallons in 1869, and a revenue of $105,761. In 1868 the quantity was only 397,705 gallons, with a revenue of $12,807. Thus it is seen that a wonderful revival has occurred in the oil trade. The suspension of the trade in 1868 led to serious consequences, and it is evident that it is capable of being almost indefinitely extended. In the matter of tobacco Quebec is in advance of Ontario, the quantity of material used in 1869 being 2,100,612 pounds, of other commodities, 634,612 pounds, and the revenue derived from it $208,100, showing the manufacture was confined to twenty establishments. The total quantity of material used in the manufacture of tobacco in 1869 for the whole Dominion, was a little short of seven millions of pounds, and the duty paid, $626,614 92. The returns for 1870 will show a very large increase. The signs of progress are everywhere visible, and no doubt can be entertained that the country is on the high road to prosperity. The agricultural wealth has become immense, and with the growth of manufactures, which has been rapid beyond all precedent, Canada occupies an enviable position. Perhaps it is not to be wondered that it should progress as it does, having alongside of it such a prosperous and go-ahead nation as the United States, whose example appears to have been so closely followed in many respects.

Canada and the United States—The Annexation Feeling and the Necessity of Peace.

The Quebec Mercury, in its issue of the first inst., says that a gentleman lately returned from the Canadian country journals was much surprised at the strong annexation feeling exhibited by the inhabitants of all classes. In the same issue the Mercury, alluding to the report that an order has been issued to forthy Jamaica, and believing that this proves that war with the United States is looked upon as a probability by the English Ministry, says:

"It behooves Canada to prepare in time for such a contingency, and to vigilantly watch the course of events, and especially the progress of negotiations on the Alabama claims and all other questions between the Governments at Westminster and at Washington. It is admitted that Canada cannot be defended against the Union, and Canadians have a right to expect that England will not compel them to be by war until she has given them an opportunity of peacefully rectifying their relations with the adjacent Republic so that they may escape the horrors of invasion, with which Georgia and West Virginia on one side of the Atlantic and Alabama and Louisiana on the other are so familiar. No false sentiment; no desire for boasting or vain-glory should exist on this important subject; the voice of our people should pronounce as one man, that come what may, so far as the Dominion is concerned, we must and will have peace with the United States."

ILLINOIS.

Heavy Failures in Chicago—Silver—Railroad Progress—How Some Men Succeed—Hard Times.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CHICAGO, Thursday, Jan. 12, 1871.

There have been quite a number of rather heavy failures in this city recently, mainly in the dry goods and clothing line. Four heavy houses, wholesale and retail dry goods, have either compromised at late than fifty per cent., or have obtained an extension, and some half a dozen smaller ones wholly in the retail line. One heavy clothing house, whose liabilities are reported up into the hundreds of thousands, failed some weeks ago, and a compromise at thirty-five cents is reported. This failure, however, did not particularly astonish anybody, as the proprietor's principal business appeared to be attending horse-races and politics. I have seen no mention of these failures in the daily papers. I suppose they are afraid St. Louis or Cincinnati will hear of them.

SILVER.

We are in danger of a silver excitement in this section on the opening of navigation in the Spring. Some time ago an account was published of the purchase of Silver Island, on the north shore of Lake Superior, by a Detroit company. The island is a low one, and when the lake is rough it is swept by the waves. The company erected a wall and coffer dam; but after they had taken out eighty tons of ore the dam gave way. This ore, when smelted, was found to be exceedingly rich, yielding one thousand dollars to the ton. I have met a gentleman who has just returned from that region, where he has been exploring, and the tales he tells of the exceeding abundance and richness of the silver-bearing rock on the northern shores of the lake are marvelous. The whole region is represented as argentiferous. He gives an account of one vein on the Amethyst River which is four feet wide, and projects in some places as much as six feet from the surrounding rock, is being much harder. This vein, it is represented, has been traced for miles, and lost in the waters of Thunder Bay. A shaft has been sunk ten feet into the vein, and, to all appearances, one-half of the "rock" is pure silver. It is composed of argentiferous galena, pure silver, sulphate of silver, and specimens assayed are reported to have produced over $6,000 to the ton. If these facts are verified, we may expect a stampede in that direction; for these mines present a more powerful attraction than those of the Western mountains.

RAILROAD PROGRESS.

In the report of the Auditor of State, there is a statement of the number of miles of railroad track laid during the past year, from which it appears that there was a total of 1,211. Of these, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Road is credited with 235, being connecting links, the most important of which is the Ottawa, Oswego and Fox River Valley, 79 miles in length. Another quite important line, credited to the Toledo, Wabash and Western, is the Decatur and East St. Louis, 114 miles in length. The Rockford, Rock Island and St. Louis is located in the western part of the State, running north and south 190 miles; the Belleville and Southern Illinois is 140 miles long; the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western, 200; the Springfield and South-eastern, 246, and the Chicago, Danville and Vincennes, 78. There have been 740 miles graded which have not been treaned. Iowa has completed 785 miles, and graded 100. And so the work is going on. Illinois, in the last twenty years, has been straddled with a network of railroads, extending to all parts of the State. It would seem almost impossible to put in another paying line anywhere; but yet others are contemplated, and I presume the people will not be satisfied until there is a track passing by every man's door. Apropos of this subject, I notice that a bill has already been introduced into our Legislature fixing three cents a mile as the maximum rate for passengers, and I presume it will become a law, as the roads have heretofore been so exorbitant in their charges that their friends are few.

LECTURES.

WENDELL PHILLIPS has delivered two lectures here within a week. The first was an old one, "The Lost Arts." The second, on the "Questions of To-morrow," was suggestive of what are to be the great questions which are to engage the attention of the American people in the future. It was a powerful effort, and every Philippic within call of the speaker's lithoryn practice and strong points; but it was well calculated to make people think. His expositions of the liquor traffic and liquor drinking and their effects, as a national question, was a powerful discussion of the subject, and should result in a reformation in political and social failure. Of course the woman-suffrage question had to be presented as one of those which must soon be met and disposed of.

HOW SOME DEY SPECULATE.

One of our grain speculators was before the United States District Court, on Tuesday, on a petition to be adjudicated a bankrupt. His statement presented a beautiful specimen of the way in which that class of our citizens do business; thus: Liabilities, $[illegible]; assets, $417, consisting of clothing and other personal effects, all of which he claimed as exempt. The gentleman graduated at Buffalo, but has been in business here several years. There are hundreds of men in Chicago engaged in the same precarious business.

BASE-BALL.

Important Movements for 1871.

The base-ball fraternity are very busy at this time preparing for the grand campaign of 1871. This is the season when the professionals are engaged in obtaining situations for the ensuing season, and club managers are on the look-out for new men to fill up the gaps, or to replace weak spots in their last season's nines. Below we chronicle the leads movements among the leading organizations and players.

At the annual meeting of the Atlantic Base-ball Club, of Brooklyn, held at their rooms on Tuesday evening, Jan. 10, the following officers were duly elected for the year 1871: President, JAS. BUCKLEY; Vice-President, Ed. N. Stafford; Recording Secretary, Samuel F. Davenport; Corresponding Secretary, Benj. Van Delft; Financial Secretary, Thos. McGunigle; Treasurer, R. L. Clapp. Directors—John C. Chapman, Robert Hoskins, A. B. Sensenic. Auditing Committee—Chas. N. Peed, Jr., John T. Moore, M. H. Flynn. Committee on Nines—Thos. Tassie, Hugh Campbell, M. H. Flynn. Reception Committee—John C. Chapman, Robert Hoskins, A. B. Sensenic.

The Atlantics have reorganized under very favorable auspices, and though their old nine will not again play together, they will secure a less number of new men. The loss of FENELON and SMART leaves two vacancies difficult to fill with players up to the standard of the two who have left. The new directors, however, propose to gather together a good supporting field for BETTELEY. The Club will, in future, have their head-quarters at SAMUELS' billiard-house, in Washington-street, an elegant club-room having been provided for them. This move undoubtedly will have the effect of improving the social status of the Club.

In this City the movements of the Mutual Club have of late been of a very important character. The accession of FERGUSON as the new Captain of the Mutual nine for 1871, and of JOE START as first baseman, will greatly strengthen the playing force of the Club, besides putting their steam up in the market. Secretary DAVIDSON, one of the most efficient officials the Club has had for years, is busy working for the new nine, and by Spring-time everything will be ready to take the field against all comers. Opposite Mr. DAVIDSON, in the country, CHARLEY MILLS will hold down the pitch, and the out-field will include HATFIELD, EGGLER and PATTERSON. The second and third bases have not yet found occupants, but FERGUSON will play at short field, his home position. SWARTWOUT will be retained, and MATTHEWS will be sent to Washington as the first baseman of the Olympics.

NELSON is still at command.

The Athletics, of Philadelphia, will place a splendid nine in the field for 1871, as will be seen by the list below, which includes MALONE as catcher, Mr. RAMSEY as pitcher, Mr. REDMAN and METZELOTT on the bases; RADCLIFFE at short field, and CUTHBERT, GREENBERGER and a new player in the out-field.

The next strong team to this will be the Olympics, of Washington, composed of five of the old-tried Stocking nine. This team will include ALLISON as catcher, ZIMMERMAN to pitch, E. MILAS, SWEASY and LEONARD on the bases, little FORCE as short-stop, and LEGRAND, BARTRONE and BEALE in the field. If this nine be captained skillfully it will be very difficult to beat it.

HARRY WRIGHT arrived in Boston on Thursday, and he will at once organize the new Boston nine for 1871. This nine will include McVEY to catch, SPAULDING to pitch, GOULD at first base, HARRIS at second, GEORGE WRIGHT short-stop, and SCHAFFER as one of the out-fielders. The gentlemen comprising the members of the Boston nine, in addition to Harry Wright, whose ambition it is, as admirers of the national game, to put a thoroughly first-class nine on the field, as exemplars of the fielding beauties of the game, and as a model professional organization, they commenced right by electing the ablest Pageant of to-day, with the model short-stop of the country as their head. With such a start, the other positions can be readily filled, so as to make up a very powerful team. They have a very effective pitcher in SPAULDING, and with the excellent Eastern material at command to draw upon, they can easily fill up any gaps with meritorious players.

In Cincinnati the fraternity are at a loss to fill the places of the absent Red Stockings. Not a tenth part of the required $5,000 stock for the new nine has been subscribed, and the chances are that the Club will play only an amateur nine this season.

In Chicago, now that there is no longer a rival nine in Cincinnati, much of the interest taken in the White Stocking nine has declined—not to the extent of abandoning the field, however; but enough has been done to destroy considerable of the enthusiasm in the market there. Manager CASEY visited this Metropolis last week to pick up some first-class players, but the men he wanted are not to be had. The Chicago Tribune lately pitched in rather hard on the Club, as follows: "Ever since the officers and shareholders of the Chicago Base-ball Club announced their intention to maintain the White Stocking nine for the season of 1871, first having ordered three thousand dollars' worth of uniforms, and then, in a letter addressed to Washington-street, an elegant club-room being provided for them in the extensive rooms now occupied by the Board of Trade, we felt that this would have the effect of improving the social status of the Club.

☞ For the convenience of those desiring to insert advertisements for insertion in the TIMES will be received at No. 1 West 14th-st., junction of Broadway and 4th-av., and at No. 6 West 14th-st., between Broadway and 5th-av., and at No. 1 Astor-place, at same rates as are charged at office of publication.

☞ Messrs. DEXTER, MARIN & Co., Bankers, No. 2 Rue Scribe, Paris, are the accredited agents for the NEW-YORK TIMES in that city.

Notice.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot under any circumstances return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscript.

"A Policy-holder who does not want to be a victim," should have accompanied his communication with his card.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

The French authorities, according to a London telegram, have protested against the bombardment of Paris, on the ground that it was begun without the formal notification mentioned by the usages of warfare among civilized nations. Thursday's bombardment of Paris is said to have been fearful, especially from the south. The outside forts show signs of distress. A telegram received in London from Versailles, on Friday, states that the mines and countermines around Fort Mont Valérien are so much alike proximity that a collision is momentarily expected. The German fire was slackened on the 12th inst., the French reply continuing weak. Advices from the beleaguered capital, to the 12th, by way of Bordeaux, represent the population to be undaunted. Sixteen thousand of Gen. CHANZY's army were captured by the Germans between the 6th and the 12th inst., besides twelve cannon and mitrailleuses. Bordeaux advices insist that Gen. CHANZY is retreating in new positions in excellent order. The corps of JAURELIBERRY crossed the Sarthe on Thursday, fighting during the passage with three divisions of the army of the Duke of MECKLENBURG. The towns of Le Mans and St. Cornelle were entered simultaneously on Thursday by German troops and occupied. A large quantity of stores were captured at both places. The French in the east, according to Gen. BOURBAKI's reports, have captured the villages of Arcy and St. Marie, and recaptured Dijon, Gray, Lure and Vesoul. The Prussians at Dieppe exacted 50,000 francs from the city. The capture of the fortified town of Perrose by the Germans secures a line of advance for the German reinforcements. The siege of Givet, on the Belgian border, has been raised. The defenders of Havre had a fight with the Germans at Bourneville, at the close of which they retired in good order. BISMARCK's reply to the Minister of State of Luxembourg has been made public. It proposes that the Duchy appoint the German Consul as mediator.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

The Opposition journals in London deplore the return to Parliament of Mr. MAGUIRE. The Conference on the Eastern difficulty has been summoned to meet in London on the 17th inst.... Extraordinary exertions are made to place the British Navy in a serviceable condition.... The City of Brooklyn is believed in England to be safe.... The Greek Government promises to punish the Marathon massacre.... The ships Calliope and Overstrand collided in the Mersey, a day or two ago, and were sunk. The ship Burton, of New-York, for Bilbao, is stranded near the latter port.

CONGRESS.

There was no session of the Senate, Saturday. The House, after some unimportant preliminary business, resumed the consideration, in Committee of the Whole, of the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation Bill. Mr. ARMSTRONG, of Pennsylvania, moved that the salary of the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court be increased to $10,500 a year, and that of each Associate Justice to $10,000. Mr. HALE, of Maine, proposed $8,500 for the Chief-Justice, and $8,000 for the other Justices. After considerable debate Mr. HALE's amendment was adopted, and the House adjourned, leaving two pages of the bill yet to be considered.

GENERAL.

The people of Whitehall, N. Y., are protesting against the work of bridging Lake Champlain, near Ticonderoga, which has already commenced.

A large number of prominent Cubans have published a declaration of their unalterable adhesion to Buelta and the Ethiopian cause. Some of them have been suspected, in former days, of sympathy with the revolution.

Gen. STONEMAN, Commander of the Department of the Pacific, has issued an order declaring his intention to prosecute a relentless Winter campaign against the Pinal and Tonto Indians in Arizona.

Over sixteen per cent. of all the merchandise imported into the United States in the year ending June 30, 1870, was the product of slave-labor, and nearly twenty-two per cent. of all the Customs receipts of the country is derived from this Industry.

An arrangement has been made by the Post-office Department which assures a regular daily transportation of the mails to and from the Pacific Coast. There has been, heretofore, an irregularity from the want of a Sunday mail from Chicago to Omaha.

They have sufficient snow and sleet at St. Louis to create in the roofs of the houses.

By an order issued on Friday, the First, Second, and Third Revenue Districts of New-York are, on the 1st of February, to form the First District; the Fourth and Sixth become the Second; the Fifth and Seventh will be the Third; and Eighth, Ninth, and Thirty-second, the other districts of this City, remain unchanged. A similar consolidation takes place in Philadelphia and Cincinnati, and is consequently to be carried out throughout the country.

Mr. BLISS, of the firm of MORTON, BLISS & Co., of this City, has been elected President of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, in place of OLIVER AMES, resigned.

The Fenians of Boston are preparing a reception for their brethren just released from English prisons, who are coming over to this country.

Bishop DOANE has drawn up for the private use of the congregations of the Diocese of Albany and also for the churches, a prayer for rain, in view of the unparalleled scarcity of water at this season.

There is to be a gathering at the Astor House, to-day, of such scientific students and scholars from the prominent colleges of the country as are desirous of accompanying the Commissioners to San Domingo.

Numerous Arion Societies and other masquerading associations have been invited to take part in the great pavement celebration in Washington, on the 8th and 21st of February.

The steamer T. L. McCOY, from St. Louis, for New-Orleans, was burned on Saturday night, on Shoo Fly bar, and several persons who leaped overboard were drowned.

The True Causes of Business Depression.

In estimating the causes and extent of the business depression that prevails, it is not necessary to speculate upon influences which affect all societies, or to ascribe to the action of Government a power it does not possess. The growth of non-producing classes is not peculiar to this country, nor is there any special connection between it and the "hard times" of which almost everybody speaks. The nearly total disappearance of the apprenticeship system, and the consequent decrease of skilled labor, are indeed facts which to Americans possess a painful significance. They proceed in part from the tolerance extended toward mechanics who are deficient in thoroughness, in new districts, where mechanics of any sort are sure of employment; in part from the impatience under training which is one of the worst characteristics of the rising generation; and in some degree also from the mistaken rules of trades-unions. But the disproportion existing between the producers and the non-producers dates far back, and has long supplied problems which the old schools of political economy have failed to solve. It affects the condition and reward of labor all over the civilized world, and has no particular bearing upon the dullness of which our manufacturers and traders complain.

The amount and forms of taxation enter more directly into the question. The cost of labor, the ability to compete with foreign producers, the profitableness of capital, and the charges upon business—are all more or less affected by the fiscal burdens that are borne. For this reason, it is desirable, to reduce as much and as rapidly as possible the taxation imposed by the General Government. The policy that exacts large amounts annually in excess of the legitimate governmental requirements, solely to pay off liabilities which have not matured, is as suicidal as it is unjust. Money is worth more to business men than the saving in interest which the premature reduction of debt effects. The continued collection of heavy taxes, for no other purpose than the formation of a surplus to be used in redeeming bonds bearing six per cent. interest in gold is, therefore, unwise, considered simply as a business transaction. Even more disastrous are Customs duties, which multiply the difficulties of manufacturing industry by augmenting the cost of raw materials. The coal tax enhances the expense of many manufactures in the East; the lumber tax enhances the cost of building, and so affects rents; too high a tax on iron enhances the outlay for every mile of railroad built or maintained; and taxes on articles of less magnitude, which enter into production, retard the return of prosperity. Ill-judged taxation has done almost as much as the Alabama to crush the ship-building interest, and has, moreover, done very much toward impairing the competitive strength of not a few manufactures. Hence the scandal which Congress brings upon itself by its neglect of matters suggested by Mr. BOUTWELL's policy, and by its refusal to continue the work of reducing the taxes.

But industry and business both suffer further from burdens which Congress cannot remove. Oppressive Customs duties are bad,—the policy which insists upon the collection of a large surplus revenue is worse. They are, however, not harder to endure than the load of State and local taxation which a wild encouragement of public projects, extravagant municipal rule, and an arbitrary power in the matter of assessments, have rapidly created. Pennsylvania virtually discourages enterprise by its taxation; Ohio allows towns and cities to consume the wealth of their citizens; and the exactions of the Federal Government are a trifle compared with the legalized plundering from which our citizens suffer at the hands of Tammany, or with the growth of taxation under Democratic rule in this State.

Apart from all these considerations, natural causes are at work which account for no inconsiderable share of the prevailing depression. The country is undergoing a self-adjusting process. The disturbing influences of the war are not wholly exhausted. The general extravagance which it fostered has been but partially corrected. The price of labor, the inevitable expenses of business, the cost of living,—are still regulated more or less by war standards. The uncertainty as to values which is inseparable from an inconvertible currency, and the losses incident to the shrinkage of values which attends an approach to specie payments, yet continues. The fondness for mere speculation remains; the screw will have to be turned a little tighter before multitudes who have been tempted into "Rings," or who have got into their heads the idea that fortunes may be had without work, are driven back to honest business. The South, too, though politically reconstructed, is far from complete in its industrial reorganization; its planters have not realized the profitableness of diversified products; its richest cotton lands lack the benefits of adequate levees; its imperfect railroad system, while overtaxing its financial ability, has hardly begun to dispute the profits of cheap and extended communication. Some time will necessarily elapse before the South can contribute as largely to the sum of business prosperity as its enormous resources will ultimately enable it to do.

These circumstances seem to us quite sufficient to explain many of the causes of the present depression. They are aggravated by the war in Europe, and by the obvious instability of all trading there. Looking at them as a whole, it must be said that while they suggest conclusive reasons for care and thrift in business, and while they forbid any extravagant expectations in regard to immediate improvement, they afford no excuse for despondency. And, happily, none is felt by our people. They are alive to the difficulties around them, but in the nature of these difficulties they see nothing that should awaken alarm. Some large firms are suffering in various parts of the country, but the general indebtedness of men in trade is, comparatively speaking, so moderate in amount that nothing like extended trouble is anticipated. Cheerfulness, then, should mingle with caution in judging of the present condition of business and its probable future.

Congress as a Court of Inquisition.

The system of trying personal grievances before a Congressional committee is fast becoming one of the greatest scandals of the day. The personal liberty of every citizen is at present supposed to be protected by the operation of certain laws which are well defined, and which, upon the whole, have worked very satisfactorily for a considerable length of time. But Congress is practically assuming the right to dispense with these laws. It is invading liberty to an extent which, if permitted in, would render some of the most valuable laws on the statute-book null and void. Some member has a spite to wreak against a personal opponent, and rises in his place to move for a committee to investigate the whole affair. After a purely one-sided statement, and a very short discussion, the Committee is granted, and orders are issued for the attendance of the member's antagonist at Washington. This order must be obeyed, no matter at what cost, and it is safe to say that it can never be obeyed without the infliction of great loss of time and money on the person summoned. On one pretext or another, any man may be forced to go to Washington, and to remain there just as long as the Committee chooses to keep him dawdling about. This is one great object of the member who moves for the Committee. He desires to cause his opponent as much annoyance as possible, and for that purpose he invokes, and is too often enabled, to use the whole power of Congress.

The latest instance of this great abuse of Congressional privileges is to be found in the case of Mr. JAMES BROOKS and Mr. HUGH HASTINGS. The affair was one with which Congress ought never to have meddled. Mr. BROOKS threatened, through a City paper, to print and circulate in handbills and placards, all over the City, a certain document, alleged to have been signed by Mr. HASTINGS seven-and-twenty years ago. Even if Mr. HASTINGS had been indiscreet at that time, he made more than sufficient reparation; and, indeed, it is his very act of reparation—real or alleged—which is ungenerously raked up as an indictment against him. A controversy more than a quarter of a century old might well have been allowed to sleep. Under the provocation of the threat referred to, Mr. HASTINGS attacked Mr. BROOKS—no doubt somewhat sharply, but people who "play at bowls must expect rubbers." The organ of Mr. BROOKS then threatened an action for libel, and had that course been taken nobody could have had anything to complain of. But Mr. BROOKS adopted a plan which suited him better. He practically admitted that he did not want an investigation in open Court by carrying his grievance to the House, and there moving for a "committee." In cases of this sort members usually stick close together. Mr. BROOKS' tale was believed, only one member having the sense to suggest that possibly there was another side to the case; and the usual arbitrary process was taken for the compulsory attendance of the defendant at Washington.

There is not only an abuse of personal liberty in such a transaction as this, but a clear infringement of the freedom of the Press. Newspapers are properly responsible to two tribunals—first to the public, and then to the law. One or other is pretty sure to do justice. But now Congress steps in to decide newspaper controversies. A member of the House who objects to any comments made upon him may at any time cause the publisher or editor of the offending paper to appear before a committee at Washington, and there have his case heard under every conceivable circumstance of disadvantage to himself. This Brooks Committee is one of the worst instances of the kind which has ever been heard of. Mr. BROOKS provoked the attack of which he complains, and had no claim upon the sympathy of his fellow-members, and no right to go skulking behind Congress when he received blow for blow. At this rate, Mr. BROOKS will soon become so highly privileged a person that no journalist in the country will be allowed to whisper "No" when he cries out "Yes." The voice of criticism, from which no one is exempt, from the President of the United States down to a constable, must be hushed when the terrible Mr. JAMES BROOKS happens to be prominently before the public. How many committees old THAD. STEVENS might have applied for if he had been disposed to make as free use of his "privilege" as Mr. BROOKS! The Committee now about to assemble will only do its duty if it makes its first meeting its last, and thus give a much-needed rebuke to a system which degrades Congress and menaces public liberty.

The Slave Trade Revived.

"Four hundred and twenty-five coolies perished in the flames" is the laconic but comprehensive sentence that concludes the brief notice, published in our columns, of the latest "coolie tragedy" in the China Seas. With each recurring year comes intelligence of similar horrors. Every season a certain number of vessels, freighted with unfortunates, leave the harbor of Macao for Cuba or Peru, and, as if in obedience to some hidden law, a certain proportion of their living cargoes inevitably meet a horrible and agonizing death. Sometimes an entire shipload is left to die of slow starvation on the treacherous shoals of the China Sea, while the Captain and his white crew make their escape in the ship's boats. Sometimes the coolies, goaded to frenzy, rise against their temporary masters, and, having massacred every soul capable of guiding the vessel over the trackless deep, perish miserably beneath the scorching rays of a tropical sun. Again, as in the case just recorded, the disaffected fire the ship, and hundreds are burnt or suffocated to death. In one way or another the coolie trade of Macao involves the annual loss, by starvation, fire, or massacre, of many hundreds of human lives.

It is high time that a traffic embodying all the worst features of the African slave trade was put a stop to. The contemptible little Portuguese colony, which maintains its existence upon the profits derived from the accursed system, has long been the disgrace of civilization in the Far East of Asia. The shipment of coolies, kidnapped or seduced by the lying representatives of the Agents to leave their homes for foreign soil, is carried on under the protection and so-called supervision of the Portuguese Government, but in distinct and open defiance of the Chinese authorities, who, pagan as they are, emphatically protest against the inhumanities of this modern slave trade. The pressure of public opinion has compelled them not merely to refuse all countenance to the system, but to execute at short notice any coolie-dealers caught in the exercise of their hated occupation. Foreigners in China generally, and more especially those resident in the British colony of Hong Kong, have strongly sympathized with the native feeling in this respect, and the leading journal at that port but very recently succeeded in getting costs from the Macao Government, in an action promoted by the then Governor, for its comments upon the flagitious and corrupt manner in which the "Superintendent of Emigration" performed their duties. Distinct in manners, race and language as are the Southern Chinese from the wretches who perpetrated the massacre at Tien-Tsin, there can be no doubt that the recently announced spread of ill-feeling in the neighborhood of Canton and Swatow is materially owing to the operations of the coolie-stealers in their immediate localities. It has long been the opinion of disinterested residents that the mere security of alien life and property at these ports required the putting down, with a strong hand, of the nest of rascals sheltered under the flag of Portugal. It is difficult at this distance to enter into the intensity of feeling that prompts the hatred and contempt of Portuguese institutions, everywhere visible among other foreigners in China. Every right-minded person, however, will sympathize in the indignation felt and expressed against a flag which not merely shelters these vile traffickers in human flesh, but derives an enormous income from the fees they pay for the immunity thus afforded them.

The abuses of which these coolies justly complain are perpetrated before and not after their embarkation on board ship. Seized in the dead of night and conveyed to the barracoons, or induced (an easy task) to gamble away their money, their clothes, and finally their personal liberty for a term of years, they remain for a few days or weeks prior to the vessel's sailing under the eye and influence of the crimp who threatens them not merely with personal punishment, but with that most powerful of all known persuasions in China, the persecution of their families and friends. The "security system" is so interwrought a portion of the Chinaman's social life, that to make a man's wife, parents and children vicariously responsible for his good behavior, is the most natural and common procedure he can conceive. The universality of marriage, and the strong claims of blood relationship in China, are material aids to the crimp's object. The coolie may indeed be asked by the superintendent, pro forma, whether he is a "willing emigrant," but he too well knows the consequences of refusal to proceed to venture it. To yet more strongly bind him, the crimp has, of course, advanced him a few dollars with which to gamble on the passage down; and the restitution of this sum would be in any case beyond his power. On the one hand, therefore, he has the choice of imprisonment until the sum be repaid; on the other a chance of making his fortune abroad. So he elects to go. By and by, as the wearisome monotony of the voyage is beginning to make him long for any change, no matter what, the few leading spirits, always to be found among a few hundred, suggest mutiny. He jumps at the suggestion, sometimes to be put down with merciless severity, sometimes to successfully escape, but yet more commonly to die a miserable death, while those who persuaded him secure their own safety. Such is, in nine cases out of ten, the history of a "coolie tragedy."

Hotels of the Future.

We have a dim memory of having, years ago, heard travelers tell of a certain public-house in Philadelphia, where all the comforts of home could be counted upon. There was a solidity about the structure, an ease about the furniture, a liberality about the cuisine, and an overspreading solicitude for the satisfaction of every want, which justified those who have ended off their traversing of earth's dull round, in speaking of having "met their warmest welcome at an inn." There were, even in those days, pretentious and gorgeous hotels in the City of Brotherly Love, which were well enough for bridal parties and that sort of thing, and where charges were high enough to suit the most fastidious; but as an ideal home for the traveler, this spot always held his heart captive.

The fact that one hotel in all the country was singled out for all this praise, proves pretty fully that, even before these degenerate days, fine furniture and garish paint were not deemed the essentials of highest happiness. Hotels there were, notably at Springfield, Mass., and in our own City, never at Washington, whose cookery was excellent, and whose wines were worthy of their fame, but each lacked something of being a traveler's home.

What was bad then, is much worse now; and if there is even one such model lodging-house as that referred to, open to the public of our day, that public is unhappily ignorant of the fact. We have plenty of architecture, abundance of rose-wood, plush, and brocatel; our feet may tread upon Wilton and Axminster by the mile; travelers may, temporarily, at least, dwell in marble halls; but all these do not make one feel at home. Then there are gildings, and frescoes, and fearfully shiny paint, not forgetting costly mirrors, grand pianos, and finery in full supply; long and liberal tables spread in barns of banquet halls; profusion of gas and glare, and to crown all, a go-where-you-please and do-what-you-like air about the whole. And yet nobody is at ease, for comfort is nowhere. The rooms allotted to all but a favored few, are seemingly half way between earth and heaven—a sort of purgatory in several respects—and when reached, are redolent, notwithstanding their resplendent adornment, of an atmosphere chilling to the heart, and suggestive of a sense of solitude and exile far from comforting. The halls are haunted by uneasy spirits who remind one of the Wandering Jew, whose air is that of disappointed seekers, or restless dreamers. The idea of happiness seems banished from all minds as being entirely out of place, and as to the thought of being the subject of anybody's solicitude, that enters no one's head. Lest this last assertion may be too sweeping, we will except from its application the modern hotel clerk, who certainly impresses all who come in contact with him, with his suspicious solicitude respecting the settlement of the bill. And it must sometimes occur to the victims of his cold-bloodedness, that he cherishes a chronic doubt of the honesty and respectability of every one to whom he speaks for the first time. That this, in conjunction with the other little matters mentioned, creates the illusion that the "guest" is either welcome, or made to feel at home, we are free-thinking enough to doubt.

It is barely possible that there is no remedy for this state of things. It may be that the peripatetic nature of the average number of people demands just such showy shams, in and out of which to flit at will. If this be so, which we do not quite believe, complaint cannot come from that quarter, because, as Artemus Ward's pill certificate has it, "for people who like this kind of pill, this is just the kind of pill that such people like." And, if gilded misery is really in demand, by all means let the want be supplied.

But there are poor creatures extant who, when denominated "guests," and heavily mulcted for bearing that title, have the notion that the name includes the idea of comfort, enjoyment, and personal attentions. Here, however, these innocents literally reckon without their host. And, because this is so true, we are led to inquire whether it would prove a ruinous experiment for somebody to attempt the establishment of a "Home for Travelers," worthy of that appellation. Such an experiment does not necessarily involve a costly building, or elaborate appointments, nor even any very vast number of rooms; but it does necessitate a thoughtful regard for the creature comforts, a provision for the outward as well as for the inner man; a style of upholstery and furnishing such as appeals less loudly to the eye, but presents its fascinations to tired nature in a manner at once irresistible and satisfying; a hotel which shall not aspire to be a caravansery, but whose "host" shall have no longer list of "guests" than he can honestly welcome, and whose halls shall echo the foot-falls of a happy crowd, and the cheery voices of friendly society. This is a want which ought soon to be supplied. That the supplying it would pay, there can be no question; for it is not a matter of money, but of comfort; and surely when four or five dollars a day must be paid, as now, for the misery we get, there are plenty of people who would gladly pay as much or more for something else, "be it ever so homely."

Slaughter by the Innocents.

The example of those charming little boys in Massachusetts who lately vindicated their youthful rights and gave such eminent promise of an illustrious manhood by stoning their teacher to death, has not been lost on their compeers. So far as we have learned, no punishment has yet been inflicted for this breach of scholarly decorum, and so an additional reason is furnished why these "village heroes who with dauntless breast, the little tyrant of their fields withstood," should become patterns for independent infancy throughout the country. Childish morality is, after all, singularly like that of grown-up people, and teaches them to be good only so long as it pays better than to be bad. Having [illegible] such an uncommonly jolly "lark," [illegible] since it can be done with impunity, we [illegible] only surprised to find it has not been more extensively indulged in.

But this abstinence is only comparative. To do them justice, the rising generation have not shown themselves unworthy of the leadership of their Massachusetts compeers. More than one teacher has been made sensible, in most unpleasant fashion, that the day of their destiny is over. The latest incident of the sort that has transpired occurred in this City. A [illegible] youth aged ten, a pupil in one of our grammar schools, was subjected by his teacher, a woman, be it understood—to the insult of a public rebuke in class. His fiery spirit chafed under this reproach from one of an inferior sex, and he resolved on vengeance. Summoning various of his trusty adherents, he waylaid the tyrant on her way home and laid her low,—another David contending against the Philistine,—with a sling-shot. Having achieved this gallant exploit, the young hero fled. We have not heard that he has been arrested. Perhaps his father is a politician; the weapon of his choice, and his dexterity in using it, would seem to imply it. At any rate, the evil genius of the desk and black-board has again been signally discomfited, and another bright example given to aspiring youth.

How long this revolutionary state of affairs will continue, or to what lengths it may go, we dare not conjecture. A general concerted resistance of teachers, a juvenile St. Bartholomew of the school-room, would not surpass one's estimate of the capabilities of the boy of the period. Evidently the old adage about "teaching the young idea how to shoot" is rapidly assuming a new and ominous significance, and the time seems to be coming when the post of teacher will require the same amount and quality of courage as the editorship of a Southern newspaper in old fire-eating days. Sooner or later, of course, retaliatory measures will be adopted by the sufferers, and we shall have class exercises diversified by exchange of pistol-shots, and class discipline enforced with bowie-knife and billy. Was not Herod, perhaps, calumniated?

The New-Jersey Senatorship.

There is a fresh phase in the New-Jersey Senatorial controversy. The Newark Courier, which has been understood to be friendly to the claims of Mr. WALSH, now counsels his withdrawal, together with that of Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, and a general union of the entire party on Mr. CORTLANDT PARKER. The impression is, however, that neither of the contesting candidates will yield to Mr. PARKER, especially as the Courier's article is harshly severe upon Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, not only as to his claims to statesmanship, but as to his legal reputation and personal consideration.

It has all along been probable that Mr. PARKER, a very able gentleman, might become a candidate, and this move shows that his friends think the time has come to put him forward. But to succeed at all in this late candidacy, he should have been made a means of conciliation, and not a fresh element of bitterness in a contest while the feeling is already sufficiently intense. Evidently there will be no compromise. It has been made impossible by the very terms in which it was proposed.

MINOR TOPICS.

We are not enamored of an elective Judiciary, per se, but the London Economist is scarcely warranted in making the elective principle responsible for the disgraceful conduct of certain New-York Judges in Erie matters. The London journalist, referring to our exposure of the parts played by BARNARD and CARDOZO when FISK is concerned, rightly declares that "anything more disgraceful to a civilized State it would be difficult to discover." But other elective Judges have shown that the interests of justice are quite safe in their hands. The frantic efforts of FISK's lawyers to prevent the trial of any case in which he is involved before any other Judges than BARNARD or CARDOZO, and especially before a Judge in any other part of the State, is proof that the elective system is less at fault than the power which, by usurpation and fraud, happens for the time to rule New-York. With a Governor owned by Tammany, and a State Senate controlled jointly by TWEED and FISK, what kind of Judges could we hope for under a system of appointment? The curse we labor under is the result, not of the elective principle, but of a system which renders an election a fraud and a farce.

A correspondent signing himself G. C. SCOTT, writes to complain that we have made allusions to Mr. TWEED's convivial tastes, and he asserts, does Mr. SCOTT, that his friend TWEED is a "temperate citizen." Perhaps only Mr. SCOTT has sent his letter to the wrong paper. Most of our information about Mr. TWEED's habits has been derived from Mr. TWEED's own paper, the World, and Mr. SCOTT will doubtless thank us for calling his attention to the following extract from that journal of April 4, 1870—not so very long ago, Mr. SCOTT will observe: "The decencies of the Ring are of a piece with its morals. Mr. TWEED passes his Sundays drinking punch in a stable. But that employment is so much more innocuous than his usual course of life, that perhaps we ought to congratulate him on his improvement, and commend him permanently to transfer his powers of absorption from charters to champagne." Send your letter to the other corner, excellent Mr. SCOTT!

The town of Liberty, Va., has just supplied another melancholy proof of the evils which are likely to follow from people "taking the law into their own hands." A Mr. JOHNSON had his dog killed in a very cruel manner, and suspected a friend of his, Dr. ROBERTS, of committing the outrage. JOHNSON armed himself with a cow-hide, (and, as it turned out afterward, with a pistol,) and then proceeded to ask an explanation of his friend. He followed the old maxim, and in time of peace prepared for war. What explanation ROBERTS gave is not known—but an altercation took place; ROBERTS drew his revolver, JOHNSON did the same, and then they tried to riddle each other with bullets. JOHNSON killed ROBERTS on the spot, and himself escaped unhurt. What JOHNSON thinks of his day's work now is not stated. But if he happens to have such a thing as a conscience about him, it is probable that his future life will not be remarked the heavier for the death he was in haste to exact vengeance for his dog.

The "gift enterprise" business among the speculators flourishes in a truly impressive manner. The journalistic wire-pullers are on the flood livery being now comfortably occupied, but, it falls to "HANK SMITH'S" lot to receive a present. A service of plate is to be given to him, properly decorated with the "Tiger's head of the American Club, of which he is Vice-President." The service consists, in all, of five pieces, and is, of course, intended as a [illegible] of how very modest a Republican may be in the Tammany fashion. It is also announced that a [illegible] Chairman. It was proposed to erect a statue of him in Tompkins-square, but Hon. Patrick GILLESPIE suggested that "it would not do to have so many monuments under way at one time." Why so modest? Let us have statues of all the Ring officials in all the parks. They will not be a greater scandal to the City than the fact that such men are allowed to occupy all the prominent places of government or honor.

A better work is not being done in this City than that which is carried on at the "Newsboys' Home," a branch of the Children's Aid Society. It provides a clean and comfortable place of refuge for poor homeless boys, and thus saves many of them from the dangers and corruptions of the streets. On week-day evenings a school is kept open at the Home in Park place, and on Sundays religious services are held, varied with addresses from visitors. People who wish to do a good service cannot be better employed than in going to this Home, and speaking a few words of encouragement to the boys. Last evening a party of ladies and gentlemen went to the institution, and several excellent addresses were delivered by Mr. BEACH, Mr. DUFFY, Mr. S. H. WALKE, Mr. BARCLAY, and other gentlemen. Some of the good seed thus sown will doubtless bring forth fruit, and it is much to be wished that more of our citizens would lend a helping hand to this indefatigable friend of the homeless boys—Mr. C. L. BRACE.

Gov. BULLOCK, of Georgia, has risen so far above grovelling partisanship as to testify that the recent election in that State was, as a whole, "as near a peaceful, fair, and unbiased expression of public opinion and preference through the ballot-box" as it was "possible to have had at this time." He alleges that improper means were here and there used to influence the votes of colored men, but asserts that, so far as his knowledge goes, no distinction was intended as against a voter because of his color. Indeed, we have the assurance that all parties in the State now "freely concede the right of the black man to the ballot." The general conclusion arrived at by the Governor is "that Congress owes it to the party to which a majority of its members belong, that no delay be allowed to occur in the work of restoring Georgia to the Union." Gov. BULLOCK cannot be suspected of lukewarmness in the Republican cause, and his opinion should carry weight.

The forbearance and good sense which have counted the Missouri Republicans to bury the feuds connected with the late election are not likely to be abandoned in nominating a candidate for the Senatorship. The selection of FRANK BLAIR by the Democrats will, no doubt, contribute still further to Republican unity. Identified with the most obstinate features of the Democratic policy, his nomination shows how little Democrats have learned in regard to the national temper since the war. The Republicans cannot possibly choose a worse candidate than BLAIR. The conditions of their results are in some degree a guarantee that the new Senator will represent the best elements of the party.

The New-York Citizen is doing hard work for Tammany, and great is its reward. It promises to be one of TWEED and SWEENY's most efficient supporters, now the ghost of poor HALPINE. On Saturday last it was in a very bad way because it thought that Republicans were showing a disposition to cut upon Democratic ground. "Let Republicans," it said, "take their full share of the national income," but, "at least, let them spare us our good old Democratic doctrines." Don't be afraid. What are now known as Democratic doctrines are not likely to be run off with by anybody. The Citizen is welcome to a monopoly of the glorious principles professed by HOFFMAN, TWEED, SWEENY, FRANK BLAIR, and all the rest of his dear friends.

The New Senatorship from Louisiana—A Sketch of Mr. Rogers.

From the New-Orleans Republican, Jan. 11.

Gen. J. R. WEST was elected United States Senator yesterday by both Houses of the General Assembly, having received in each a handsome majority. Today the Senate will meet the House in joint session for the purpose of counting the vote and formally announcing the result. But public interest in the contest terminates with the already known action of the two Houses voting separately.

Gen. WEST is therefore our Senator elect to succeed Mr. HARRIS, whose term expires in March with the present Congress, and will hold the position for six years.

The successful candidate is a native of New-Orleans, having been born in this city in 1832. Here he grew up to manhood, when he accepted a commission as Captain and served in the Mexican War under Gen. P. F. SMITH. Shortly after peace was proclaimed, Gen. SMITH's command was ordered to the Pacific coast, and Capt. WEST went with it. He subsequently retired from the army and engaged in the publication of the San Francisco Price Current, in which occupation he continued for years. When the war of the late rebellion came on, he joined a Californian regiment and marched a distance of fifteen hundred miles over the plains with infantry and cavalry, to Western Texas, bringing the force that relieved Col. CANBY. He also served in important commands in Arkansas and the South-west before the close of the war.

When the Confederates were dispersed and peace proclaimed throughout the country, Gen. WEST retired from the military service and moved to Texas, where he invested about all his means in the purchase of a railroad. But the business of that road was conducted under United States control, and it did not respond properly to the enterprise, and the outlay proved to be unprofitable. In 1867, Gen. WEST accepted from Gen. HERRON the place of Chief Deputy United States Marshal for this district, which he retained until a change was made by President GRANT. After this, a short term of service in the Custom-house as Auditor of Customs, and then he was appointed by Gov. WARMOTH to be Administrator of Improvements under the new city charter. Here he has shown to the people who have had an opportunity to observe and note his official acts the untiring industry, the promptness and correctness of decision, and comprehensive ability that have earned for him the reputation of being one of the best administrative men in the State. In short, whatever Gen. WEST has undertaken to do, he has done it well, and we may hope that his Senatorial duties will form no exception to the rule. He is a staunch supporter of the union of the States under the Constitution, and sincerely attached to the principles of the Republican Party as a means to accomplish the great end.

The Jersey City Water Trouble—The Stand-Pipe Placed in Position at Last.

The end of the water famine in Jersey City draws near, and the thirsty citizens are looking forward to speedy relief. Yesterday the new stand-pipe was raised and placed in position. The works will be completed today or to-morrow, and it is probable that the full supply of water will be introduced into the pipes as early as Tuesday night. The new pipe is 120 feet high, and stands on a pedestal forty feet high. Its cost is about $30,000.

WASHINGTON.

The San Domingo Commissioners—Claims of the Georgia Senators—Railroad Women from New-York to Washington—The Hinkley-Bowers Case—Sunday Mails to the Pacific Coast—Public Buildings—Various Matters.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The members of the San Domingo Commission and their attaches, who rendezvoused here, left for New-York on the Pennsylvania train to-night. The party consisted of Hon. B. F. WADE and Hon. ANDREW D. WHITE, Commissioners; Hon. ALLEN A. BURTON, Secretary; JOHN P. FOLEY and B. S. HITT, Stenographers; Prof. BLAKE, of the State Department, Geologist; Dr. PARY, of the Agricultural Department, Botanist, with one assistant. Gen. BOYNTON, correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, of the Washington Republican, and Mr. BURTON, of the Baltimore American, were also of the party. They will be joined in New-York by Dr. HOWE, of Boston, the third member of the Commission, and also by several young scientific men from different colleges, who go out for scientific purposes. Commissioner WHITE called this afternoon with Senator SUMNER, who invited Secretary BOUTWELL and Sir JOHN ROSS to meet him. The appointment of the Commission, especially the appointment of Dr. HOWE, a leading friend of Mr. SUMNER, and the giving of permission for several correspondents to accompany the expedition who have been bitterly opposed to annexation, has completely disarmed its opponents, and the general judgment is that the President is sincerely determined that the public shall know all the facts. The Report, therefore, is much more harmonious than has been heretofore since the subject has been under consideration.

THE GEORGIA SENATORS.

The occasion as to which delegation of Georgia Senators shall be received turns almost entirely on questions of law, rather than of fact, and a long discussion by the lawyers of the Senate may be expected when the Judiciary Committee makes its report. The Senators elected in February, 1870, Messrs. FARROW and WHITELEY, place seats on the ground that the Legislature of Georgia was not a Legislature legally organized, and so qualified to elect United States Senators, until it was organized under the law of July 15, 1870, and that Congress has so determined by the passage of that law which recognized the Legislature by which HILL and MILLER were elected in 1868, and that the Judiciary Committee and Senate have thus so determined by once refusing seats to the last named. Messrs. HILL and MILLER deny that they were not admitted last year by reason of the illegality of their election, and claim that it was only on account of the measures adopted by the Legislature which elected them, after their election was made, that Congress decided Georgia not to be entitled to representation, and that the assignment of that reason for their rejection at the time was a substantial acknowledgment that their election was legal. They claim that at the time they were elected no question was raised upon the legality of the election, and that but for the subsequent acts of the Legislature their rights to seats would not have been questioned. They claim, further, that their election was in no way affected by the subsequent illegal action and consequent reorganization of the Legislature.

A QUESTION OF FARE.

A controversy of considerable interest to travelers between New-York and Washington is now going on between the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and its connections with New-York. The gold capital tax on passengers having been abolished, the fare should be reduced from $8 to $7.70. The roads north of Baltimore ask the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to make the ticket $7.65, and they offer to deduct twenty cents from their present aggregate local rate and to pay the Baltimore and Ohio full local rate to produce this result; but thus far the officers of the latter have refused to make any arrangement. It is said they are holding off in order to compel their connections to make new rates for freight at the same time. However this may be, the fact now is that through passengers between New-York and Washington pay twenty cents more for passing over the Washington branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad than do way passengers from Philadelphia and Baltimore.

OFFICE OF THE CENSUS BUREAU.

Gen. WALKER, the Superintendent of the Census, has had a room in the Interior Department building prepared for, and assigned to him. Heretofore his office has been in a small and inconvenient room in the buildings temporarily leased by the Department for the occupation of the census clerks. His office is now on the opposite side of the corridor from that of the Secretary of the Interior, and is much more convenient for the Superintendent, and for those whose business calls to his room.

THE NEW COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS.

Gen. LEGGETT, the new Commissioner of Patents, is expected in Washington to assume the duties of the office, this week.

THE HASTINGS-BROOKS AFFAIR.

Simon Hastings and Thomas R. Stewart, Esq., his counsel, have arrived here, for the purpose of supporting the charges made by Hastings against Mr. BROOKS. Hugh says he will dispose of the affidavit read against him very speedily. There is some gossip to the effect that there is to be no investigation after all.

PROMINENT ARRIVALS.

Among the prominent arrivals here are Congressman THOMAS CUNING, LEONARD JUNCOS, NATHAN BISHOP, of New-York; W. L. WILSON and WILLIAM MCMICHAEL, of Philadelphia, and NATHAN APPLETON, of Boston.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The documents from the Department of State accompanying the President's annual Message have just been bound, and the copies distributed. They contain, among other subjects of interest, the correspondence with the foreign affairs, correspondence in regard to the commercial relations between the United States and the Spanish American States and Brazil. This information was received from our Ministers, in accordance with the request of Secretary FISH, with a view of enabling the President to make recommendations with a view to the improvement of those relations.

THE FAIR FOR THE FRENCH SUFFERERS.

The fair for the relief of the French sufferers by the war, which opened a week ago, is still in progress. Those having it in charge have been very successful. Donations continue to be received from other cities.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

The Metropolitan Branch of the Evangelical Alliance of the United States held its annual meeting at Lincoln Hall this afternoon, and was addressed by Hon. PETER PARKER, Rev. Drs. THOMAS and ANDERSON, delegates from New-York, and by Rev. Drs. MCGUIRE and NEWMAN, of this city. There was a very large audience, including Senators and Representatives in Congress, and many others of distinction, and much interest was manifested in the proceedings.

MEETING OF FENIANS.

The Celtic Club, composed of Fenians, held a meeting today, and appointed a committee to proceed to New-York to participate in the honors to those recently released from British imprisonment.

SUDDEN ILLNESS OF ADMIRAL PORTER.

Admiral PORTER was stricken with pleurisy on Friday night last and was confined to his bed until a late hour this evening. He is now better and entirely out of danger.

SUNDAY MAILS TO THE PACIFIC COAST.

The Postmaster-General has made an arrangement with the Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, by which the mail is to be carried on Sundays between Chicago and Omaha, each way, connecting with the trains on the Pacific Railroad, which run every day. For want of this arrangement heretofore, no mail was received at San Francisco from the East on Fridays, and none on the corresponding week day in the Pacific and intermediate States and Territories, and no mail was received at the East one day each week. A very serious inconvenience is thus obviated.

CLAIM OF A MAIL CONTRACTOR.

The resolution offered in the House of Representatives, on Friday last, by Mr. DAWES, and the statements published thereon, tending to create the impression that there has been some fraud on the part of the Post-Office Department in the adjustment of the claim of GEORGE CHEOPEREMO, for several thousand dollars, upon a mail contract, calls forth the following statement, based on authentic data, and made as a matter of justice to the Post-office General and all the parties concerned: In 1867-8 a law was passed requiring the Postmaster-General to adjust and settle the claims of CHEOPEREMO for carrying the mails, and for damages on account of the suspension of his contract. Some controversy arose as to the proper construction of this law, so far as it relates to the basis of settlement of the claim, and the subject was considered and discussed from time to time, by the Postmaster-General and Attorney-General, from 1868 to 1870, but a construction of the law satisfactory to all parties could not be adopted. In order to end the controversy the matter was submitted to Congress, and after considerable by the Postal Committees of both Houses and the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, a joint resolution was passed on the 15th of July last fixing the basis of settlement and directing the Postmaster-General to investigate and adjust the claims under the act for CHEOPEREMO's relief of March 3, 1867, the proofs still remaining on file in the Post-office Department, where they had been for years. The Postmaster-General considered it to be his plain duty to examine the evidence, and settle the claims on the basis fixed by Congress, and a few days ago he concluded this work, and directed that the amount found to be due CHEOPEREMO should be paid—about $200,000 less than was demanded by the claimant.

THE LAND OFFICE

Removal of Commissioner Wilson—Some of the Reasons Privately Stated—How a Land Patent is Executed—The Ground of the President's Suspicions.

From Our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Jan. 14, 1871.

The nomination of WILLIS DRUMMOND, of Iowa, to succeed JAS. S. WILSON as Commissioner of the General Land Office, again revives the incidents connected with the Grant-Cox correspondence respecting the MCGARRAHAN claim to the ranche known as the Panoche Grande. It will be remembered that the President in his letter on the subject of that claim, cautioned the Ex-Secretary against approving, without due scrutiny, the official acts of Mr. WILSON, stating, in terms, that he had suspicions of that officer, which he would explain at a more convenient season. In all probability the President made this explanation, and recited to the late Secretary the facts and circumstances which led to these suspicions; but, with his characteristic reticence in such cases, he does not augment the agitation of the matter by giving those reasons to the public, and pursues the more charitable course of giving Mr. WILSON an opportunity to quietly resign, without publicly advertising the reasons which prompted him to desire a change. Outsiders have, therefore, been left entirely to conjecture as to the cause of these suspicions, although there have been reasons enough assigned by the people who pretended to know all about it. They were asserted, however, with a positiveness which proves this much, at least, that a man may for forty years be an official of Uncle Sam and still be unlike the wife of CESAR.

ISSUING A LAND PATENT.

The recent investigation before the Judiciary Committee of the House respecting this same McGarrahan claim, conclusively shows that there was certainly room for suspicion, as anybody who will take the pains to read the testimony when it appears, will readily perceive. That there has been careless swearing on one or both sides during the progress of the case is plain. In order to a full understanding of the matter let us state the details of business connect d with the issuing of a land patent for a claim of the nature of the one in controversy. A claimant for lands under a Mexican or Spanish grant on reaching the General Land Office is, in the regular order of business, referred to that branch of the office under charge of the principal Clerk of Private Land Claims—a Presidential office, but under control of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Here his claim is examined and passed upon, and, if allowed, the patent for the lands desired is here written and finally recorded. There are, however, two other officers before whom the patent must go before becoming a complete and perfect evidence of title. These are, the President's Secretary to sign Land Patents, and the Recorder of the General Land Office, both appointees of the President, although nominally under the authority of the Land Bureau. After a patent is prepared, it is submitted by letter from the Commissioner, first to the President's Secretary, requesting the President's signature to the patent, and then to the Recorder, asking for the signature of that officer. Both of these signatures are necessary to complete the document. The Recorder and President's Secretary are required to preserve the originals of these letters on their files. In the case of private claims like that of MCGARRAHAN, the patents are not recorded in the regular Recording Division, as is done in almost every other case of land conveyance, but are, for office convenience, recorded in the division whence they emanate.

THE MCGARRAHAN PATENT.

It will be seen from the foregoing, that when the McGarrahan patent was ordered to be issued, it would be prepared in the Division of Private Land Claims; then be sent to the President's Secretary to sign patents, accompanied with a letter from the Commissioner, then to the Recorder, accompanied with a letter to him, and thence back to the starting point in the Division of Private Land Claims. It will be remembered that the controversy hinges upon the issuance, or alleged issuance, of this patent, McGARRAHAN claiming that the patent was duly signed and recorded, and the action of the Department therefore concluded. This was denied by the Department officials, and here it is that the suspicions of the President were aroused. In support of McGARRAHAN's averments, it is shown that to the record of the patent is affixed the name of "ABRAHAM LINCOLN, by W. O. STODDARD," his Secretary. Mr. STODDARD makes oath that he signed a patent of that description, but does not identify the last sheet in the patent as now exhibited in the Land Office, and which contains no signature, leaving an inference to be drawn that would at least demand investigation. Judge GRANGER, the Recorder, was absent at the time the patent is alleged to have been signed, and the duty of signing devolved with another person. The letter to him, accompanying the patent, if one was written, should be on his files; but he testifies before the Committee that, upon examination, he finds that some of these letters have been abstracted, and that the locks of his file-cases have been tampered with.

WHAT MCGARRAHAN'S ATTORNEYS SAY.

In connection with these statements, the attorneys of McGARRAHAN allege that they have been rudely treated, and prohibited by official orders from appearing before the Department; that their wealthy contestants have had every facility afforded them in the prosecution of their claim; that parties in high political circles in the interest of the New Idria Mining Company, have steadily frequented the Commissioner's office, remaining with him for hours in confidential consultations; that parties in the interest of that Company, belonging to the Senate of the United States, have personally urged and prosecuted the claims adverse to McGARRAHAN, and even remained in the city for that purpose after the adjournment of the last and longest session of the present Congress; that by common report, founded on well-known facts, the said Commissioner owed his elevation to some of the men interested in the New Idria claim, and that during his last four years as Commissioner, he has obsequiously listened to and acted in the interests of these men, in some cases willfully misconstruing the plainest words of statutory law.

THE GROUNDS OF SUSPICION.

These charges are mentioned simply to show the grounds upon which the suspicions of the President were probably based, and not from any opinion as to their foundation in truth. Whether true or false, enough is shown to justify the President in ordering a change in the head of the Land Department as being the most effectual proceeding to quiet the existing dissatisfaction, which, it may be added, is by no means limited to the parties interested in this case. Perhaps an investigation might, in theory, have better answered the justice of the case, but aside from the labor, expense and delay of such procedure, it would have resulted in completely demoralizing the Land Bureau, which, according to all accounts, is already in a sadly confused condition.

THE OUTGOING COMMISSIONER.

Mr. WILSON, the retiring Commissioner, like most men who have held a long lease of public service, goes out with the good wishes of many warm friends and amid the exultations of many bitter enemies. If the assessment rolls of this city are an indication, he has not omitted to save unto himself an ample competency for his old age; and the records of West Point and Annapolis will show that the education of his children has been kindly cared for through the generosity of the Government. It is to be regretted that the closing days of his long and arduous official life should be clouded with the uncomplimentary circumstances which are here recorded. CYMON.

CHINA.

Particulars of the Final Settlement of the Tien-Tsin Matter—The Guilty City Pays Only a Small Part of the Indemnity—Honors to the Condemned—The Feeling of the People—A Coolie Mutiny—Extent of the Coolie Trade.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HONG KONG, Tuesday, Nov. 15, 1870.

I am able by this mail to give full particulars of the final settlement of the Tien-tsin matter, the French Consul at Shanghai having sent copies of the whole correspondence to the Chamber of Commerce. A portion of this has already reached you, the only documents new to your readers being Prince KUNG's dispatch to Count HOCHECHOUART, detailing the satisfaction offered by the Pekin Government, the list of those condemned, and a schedule of the indemnities. It should be noted that the French Minister explicitly denies either acceptance or rejection of the terms put forth. "The Chinoe," he says, "choose to take certain measures, but not those demanded by me. It remains to be seen whether the French Government will consider them satisfactory." Hence the dispatch of CHUNG HOW to Paris, where, if the status bellí remains, he will probably have arrived before these lines reach you.

WHO PAYS THE INDEMNITY.

Prince KUNG's dispatch opens, of course, with a declaration of the grief caused to himself and colleagues by the massacre. "Considering," he says, "the many years China and France have been on friendly terms, no one anticipated such a catastrophe; even now we are overwhelmed with confusion and emotion." He then proceeds:

"It has been decided that a sum of 250,000 taels shall be paid as indemnity, which, under the arrangements of the Minister of Finance, your Excellency can receive from the Customs Administration at Tientsin and Pekin, at Kiangsu (Shanghai and Canton,) to divide it subsequently between the families of Consul FONTANIER, the other functionaries and the merchants. The Church will receive that which belongs to it. I received on the 13th inst. our dispatch, informing me that the material losses sustained by the religious establishments and other people, the sum of 210,000 taels. The Hoo-poo has already decided that the payment of this reimbursement shall be made by the Maritime Customs of Tien-tsin."

In other words, the total amount of damage is estimated at $460,000, the larger half of which is to be paid, not by Tien-tsin, the guilty city, but by Shanghai and Canton! Well may the local journals protest against such an arrangement. It is universally felt that whatever indemnity be imposed, it should come out of the pockets of the Tien-tsin officials and people. To make it a charge against the Customs revenue derived from foreign trade is bad enough; but to throw more than half of it upon that revenue at other ports, is (in Chinese eyes) to make game of the French demand for satisfaction.

THE SCHEDULE OF INDEMNITIES.

The murder and outrage of the Sisters of Charity, the confiscation of the children, destruction of the convent and other damages is, as you will notice, appraised at 210,000 taels ($300,000.) The other sum of 250,000 taels ($357,142) is thus divided:

	Taels.
To the family of Consul Fontanier	30,000
To the family of Mr. Simon, Chancellier	20,000
To the family of M. and Mme. Thomas	20,000
To the family of M. de Challemaison, (merchant)	10,000
To the family of Mme. de Challemaison	10,000
	120,000
For the Church	130,000
Total	250,000

[NOTE.—A dollar is, approximately, 7.10ths of a tael.]

THE LIST OF THE CONDEMNED.

The list of condemned offers no points of sufficient interest to make it worth transcribing. Twenty names are given of men condemned to death; six of men banished ten years to the confines of Tartary for stealing and wounding; and nineteen others are described as banished three years for the same crimes in a minor degree. I have heard no explanation of the discrepancy between the number stated as executed and the number actually beheaded, (sixteen.) There is, however, little doubt that several of the latter were comparatively innocent, though a few, who were likely to be troublesome in pressing their claims to reward for exterminating the foreigners, were undoubtedly included in the list.

THE FEELING OF THE PEOPLE.

The feeling of the people is, unmistakably, that the executed men were martyrs, and that the authorities played them false in consenting to say one being executed for the affair. A short time since a fire occurred at Tien-tsin, and the Fire brigade (who were particularly conspicuous in murdering the Sisters) refused to turn out when called on by the Mandarins, saying that they had deceived them about the massacre, and were not going to get them out in a mob again on any pretense. Two hundred houses were consequently burned to the ground. Comment upon this is needless. I forgot to note, in my previous account of the indemnities awarded to the criminals executed, that the heads were sewn on to the bodies after decapitation—the strongest possible proof that they were not held to have committed a "capital" offense, minor crimes, such as theft, for instance, being equally punished by beheading. It is at the present moment, no matter what official reports you may receive, unsafe for foreigners to move about at Tien-tsin. At other ports, also, a most unfriendly feeling is evinced by those residing in the neighborhood.

TROOPS MASSING AT TAKU.

Troops are being rapidly massed at Taku, where the forts, which twice proved such tough opponents to the British and French forces in 1858-59, still command the entrance to the Peiho, and consequently the chief approach to Tien-tsin and Pekin. Despite the peaceable protestations of the Chinese, they are having up arms and ammunition in all directions, their agents having, a week or two since, purchased ten thousand stand of arms at Yokohama. A wide-spread conviction obtains among Chinese and foreigners alike that a war, bloodier and more obstinate than any in which China has yet engaged, has "got to come," and your correspondent fully shares that belief. That the more intelligent of the Pekin Mandarins desire it, I do not think, as they perfectly well know what the result will be. But they are now reaping the fruits of their double-dealing when Pekin was occupied by the Allies. They then represented that the admission of foreigners was a mere concession to avoid the painful necessity of slaughtering them, they declaring that they would enter Pekin at all hazards. The country people believe this religiously, and clamor for the extirpation of the hated barbarians, nor do the officials dare plead the probability of defeat.

LOCAL TOPICS—ANOTHER COOLIE MUTINY.

Another of those disgraceful episodes which distinguish the Macao coolie trade has just occurred not far from here at Tienpak. The Nouvelle Penelope, a French coolie vessel, cleared from Macao a few days since with 300 coolies on board. Scarcely had they got outside than the coolies mutinied, killing the Captain, and a portion of the crew, a few only escaping to tell the tale, and carrying the vessel into the harbor of Tienpak. The French Consul at Canton has started in a Chinese gun-boat for the place, with a view of recapturing the vessel and rescuing any white survivors there may still be on board. Despite the temporary check it received during the crusade of the China Mail against its atrocities, the coolie trade is again flourishing as vigorously as ever. It is a great pity that the leading treaty Powers do not combine to tell the Portuguese that they must abandon it.

A HEAVY GALE.

A heavy gale raged upon the ocean from the 3d to the 5th inst., and much damage was done to shipping. The American ship Wilde, hence to Shanghai, put back disabled, and the coast steamers Venus, Rona and Rose were all more or less damaged, though happily no great loss was done. Smaller vessels suffered severely. Considerable efforts have been made to get an ordinance passed appropriating $5,000 for building a new chancel to our Cathedral. The non-official members of the Council, however, protested against this use of public funds, and suggested that those who wanted it should pay for it. So the matter was put over till next meeting. MISS KEENE' MATINEES.

Miss MARIE KEENE, an accomplished and ambitious artist, of whose performances here we have kept an unbroken record, gave at Steinway Hall, on the afternoon of Saturday, the first of a series of four piano-forte recitals. The smaller room of the hall was occupied for the occasion. It ought to have been crowded, and we trust that it will be on Saturday next, when the second of these concerts is to occur. The opportunity of listening to thoroughly enjoyable compositions in a place where no atom of sound is lost, cannot long be overlooked by the appreciative. When CHOPIN was dying, he said to the Countess CZARTORYSKA, "Play good music; I shall hear it." Late entertainments offered here have been ill-fitted to give the composer's spirit the pleasure he wished for his after-life, and we might counsel Miss KEENE and a few equally conscientious performers to be content with kindred promises of approval, were we not satisfied that some living encouragement will be shown their efforts. A programme, including BEETHOVEN's sonata in E flat, (Opus 29,) the same composer's "Moonlight" sonata, a "Novelette," by SCHUMANN, a waltz by RUBINSTEIN, and one of LISZT's Hungarian rhapsodies can surely be recommended as worthy of pleasing. We do not think that Miss KEENE is, of all known pianists, best suited by talent and temperament to interpret it, but we are fully prepared to do homage to the courage which prompted its selection, and to the study and intelligence which secured a clear and technically-satisfying rendering. When Miss KEENE gave her first concert in this City, we expressed hearty admiration for the vigor and the fluency of her execution, and the correctness of her reading. At the same time a reservation was apparent in so far as sensibility and imagination are concerned in the work of the artist. We see no reason now for a modification of our opinion on these several points. Without reproducing any of the numerous "word-poems" which fanciful writers have constructed upon the tone-poems of the masters, the foregoing mention of their title will enlighten the reader as to their demands. These were not fully responded to. More difficult in technique than the "Moonlight" sonata, but less exacting in expression, the sonata in E flat was rendered, as may be inferred, with better effect than the work last named, and the final movement, a presto con fuoco, in six eight time, was carried on with exceeding brilliancy and power. SCHUMANN'S "Novelette," though excessively complicated, was read with facility and finish. The "Cat's Fugue," by SCARLATTI, was given coherence with the clearness so rarely attained by modern players. But we cannot point to Miss KEENE' performance of the waltz by RUBINSTEIN—a fresh and delicious trifle—or to that of the rhapsody—not the threadbare number of the series, but novel to the ear both for theme and treatment—as deserving of unlimited admiration. Though suffering from hoarseness, Mme. KEENE-MICHALESI lent her aid to her daughter, and sang an "Ave Maria" by KOCKY, "Der Neuderiege," by SCHUBERT, and "Valencia's Rose," by C. KEENE. This last song merits repetition.

ST. DAVID'S BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

A grand vocal and instrumental concert will be given at Steinway Hall on Tuesday evening in aid of the benevolent fund of the St. David's National Welsh Society, for the relief of the sick and poor of that nationality. The programme will be unusually agreeable to a miscellaneous audience, as it includes a choice selection of ordinary vocal and instrumental concert music, and, in addition, many of the gems of melody and song rendered famous by the old Welsh bards. The artists who will lend their aid are Mme. Anna Bishop, Mr. W. Candidus, Mr. J. R. Thomas, Mr. Toulmin, Mr. Harry Sanderson, and Mr. George W. Morgan.

PERSONAL.

The Kellogg concert troupe has returned to New-York, and the fair prima donna with Mr. W. COLBY, Signor RANDOLFI, Mr. W. MACDONALD, and the brilliant pianist, Mr. JAMES M. WEHLI, are now enjoying a brief season of repose after an uninterrupted series of triumphs within and beyond the limits of the State. ... M. C. LEFRANC departed yesterday for New-Orleans, where he will give ten performances with the French opera troupe established each Winter in that city. M. LEFRANC refused to accept an engagement for a longer period, with a view, we believe, to lending his valuable aid to a season of opera likely to begin toward the middle of next month at the Academy.

Theatrical.

TO-NIGHT'S PROGRAMME—BIELO'S.

The only changes of bill to be made at the City theatres this evening are noticeable at Wallack's, where Mr. LESTER WALLACK will effect his long-awaited rentrée; at Luna Edwin's, where Mr. FRANK DREW will act for the first time in "Maseppa," and at the Stadt Theatre, where Mmes. REHBACK and VERSTA will perform in "Romeo and Juliet." ....Notwithstanding the present great success of "The Black Crook," at Niblo's, the management proposes, on Monday evening next, to introduce into the third act several new incidents, while retaining all the old attractions. Prominent among the novelties will be a parlor-entertainment by the HERMANN brothers and the HERMANN sisters, from the Theatre Royal, in Copenhagen. The SEAGRIST family, of Berlin, will also introduce a new divertisement; the latter being especially adapted to please the gentler sex and the younger portion of the community. We are assured that the performances of the new-comers are very remarkable.

The Rapid Transit Question—A New Suggestion.

To the Editor of The New-York Times:

The question of rapid transit through the City appears at present to be the all-absorbing topic of the hour. Its great importance to all our residents, it would seem, should have led to its solution years ago. But it has not; and now some eighty million passengers travel backward and forward daily through the City, and in a way that certainly is a reproach to the progressive spirit of our people.

There have been numerous ideas advanced for accomplishing the object, and the Legislature has granted charters to three companies, two of them experimental—the third purposing to construct a road nearly similar to the Under-ground Railway of London, but which has never been built, for the want of capital, and it is fair to presume that any other project involving an outlay equal to this one cannot be carried through. It has been proposed that the aid of the City be given in the construction of a road through its limits, but with the Court-house, Harlem Bridge, and numerous other little jobs fresh in our memories, this is scarcely "a consummation devoutly to be wished."

Now, what is wanted is to build a road that shall not be an experiment, and at a cost so low that the interest on the capital required for its construction shall not equal its gross income, as must be the case with most of the plans before the public. The following design, it is claimed, will accomplish this object. It has been submitted to several engineers and railroad men, who have given it their hearty approval.

It consists of a very narrow-gauge road, with rolling stock to match, to run under-ground; none of the latter to exceed four feet in width. The cars would be obliged to have transverse seats, with sliding doors at the side. In this manner an excavated way could be made [illegible] the streets of Washington, Broadway, and Greenwich-st, [illegible] the present location by tree beams, and between the tracks of that road place iron grating sufficiently strong to sustain any weight to which it may be subjected. This arrangement would allow perfect ventilation, the want of which is urged by many against tunnel roads. The motive power to be steam, and locomotive engines of a pattern nearly similar to those in general use could be employed. By having the smoke-pipes inclined to one side, so as to pass beneath the grating, the exhaust steam and products of combustion could be discharged into the open air.

Trains of three cars each starting every three minutes (the headway on the South-eastern line in London) would carry more passengers between Harlem and the City Hall than the Third-avenue line does at present. The number of cars could easily be doubled, or even quadrupled, should the traffic demand.

The small tunnel would cost very much less than one of ordinary dimensions, although it would be about one-half the width and one-third the height of the latter, only about one-quarter as much material and work would be required in its construction, as all its parts could be built much lighter.

The able and experienced engineer, Mr. J. G. BUCKOUT, in his report on the New-York Central Under-ground Railroad, makes the cost of that undertaking about $2,000,000. The expense of the road proposed should not much exceed $2,000,000, and its capacity would be fully equal to that of the Central.

It is universally conceded that the wear and tear on a narrow gauge is much less than on a broad-gauge road—an important item of profit in working the former.

I have merely presented the outlines of a cheap plan for rapid transit, the essential element of which is a very narrow-gauge road and consequent small amount of space required for its operation. In the less traveled parts of the thoroughfares through which it is proposed to have it run, it might be advisable to leave the excavation entirely open at the top, still more diminishing the cost of building. THE MURDER MYSTERIES.

The Nathan Murder Story—Explanations by Superintendent Kelso—The Precise Value of the Alleged Clues.

The sensational story furnished yesterday by a Chicago detective, relative to the identity and whereabouts of the Nathan murderer, created considerable comment yesterday in this City, as everything connected with the mysterious assassination of Mr. NATHAN naturally does. A TIMES reporter called on Superintendent JAMES J. KELSO, yesterday, for the purpose of obtaining some authentic information in the matter.

It appears from his statements that in the early part of December last, a man, giving the name of WM. P. FELCKER, called on Superintendent KELSO, at his office, and gaining a private interview, began alluding to the number of homicides committed in this City during the year, and as Mr. KELSO anticipated, when he began, he finally broached the Nathan case. After considerable skirmishing, FELCKER, at length hinted that he was in possession of information of importance relative to the unknown assassin, and asked if KELSO was authorized to advance any money to aid in working up the clues.

Although the Police Superintendent had been previously approached by individuals pretending to have clues in their possession in the Nathan case, who subsequently proved to be entirely in the dark themselves, he listened patiently to FELCKER, and endeavored to grasp his information. But when he plumply asked the man for his information, or an outline of it, FELCKER drew off and intimated that he must first be satisfied that the rewards offered by the family were to be untouched, and that he must have an earnest in order that he might successfully work. He professed to have his clues so finely worked down that he would be able, in a short time, to put his hand on the man who had actually committed the murder.

Two or three interviews were had, but the stranger still kept his mouth suspiciously closed, when the Superintendent asked permission to call in Justice DOWLING, who had already taken a great interest in the case and had also worked hard in the hunt for the criminal. FELCKER at first objected to the Magistrate's presence, but finally consented, and Judge DOWLING also heard the meagre story of the man.

FELCKER was then told by Superintendent KELSO that no interference or claim would be interposed by any of the Police officials in the matter of the large rewards offered by the NATHAN family, and both the Superintendent and the Magistrate assured him that they would render all the assistance in their power, that the entire Police Department be handled if necessary, and they would also call on the military should an unlooked-for emergency requiring it arise.

FELCKER then stated that he was not alone in the matter, but was assisted by Col. WOOD, formerly Chief of the United States Secret Service Department, and it was remarked that at nearly every interview FELCKER introduced Detective WADDY, of Jersey City, the welcome guest taking part in the conversations, merely lending an attentive ear to them, possibly for future use.

Although Superintendent KELSO and Judge DOWLING were satisfied by that time that FELCKER's information would prove worthless, they consented to add Jay Gould to the conclave. The latter gentleman, representing the NATHAN family, joined with the officials in assuring FELCKER that he would be honorably and fairly treated, should his information prove of any positive value, but the man seemed suspicious and wanted money down, as he stated that he would have to use some money, which he would not work on promises. It was finally decided to test FELCKER by furnishing him with $200 in cash, or a third of the amount claimed, and a promise of the additional $1,000 should the case develop in an encouraging manner, agreeably to this arrangement Judge DOWLING gave Superintendent KELSO a check for $200, which was duly paid over to FELCKER, who was required to sign a receipt in the presence of the bank cashier to the effect that he accepted the money on condition that he would furnish reliable information relative to the Nathan murder. As FELCKER was leaving the bank with Superintendent KELSO and Justice DOWLING, the latter remarked that as many parties had already made attempts to obtain money from the NATHAN family, the authorities were compelled to be on their guard against imposition. He also said that if any one was so base as to add to the sorrow of the afflicted family by raising false hopes, or by swindling them with incorrect or worthless information, the Police authorities throughout the country would make every step in the Union too hot to hold him, and that the authorities of this City would give such an impostor the full benefit of the law.

FELCKER seemed to wince at the language of the Magistrate, but subsequently recovering himself, replied that he was satisfied that within ten days from that date he would furnish information that would warrant an arrest. This interview took place on the 17th of December, and FELCKER was to return on the following Monday (19th) to have another conference. He did not keep his appointment, however, and only turned up day or two after, when he stated to Mr. KELSO that Col. WOOD had not satisfied with the agreement made, and wished other and more liberal terms. The Superintendent gave him no hope of any other arrangement, when FELCKER reluctantly produced the clue he had secured, and surrendered it. As FELCKER left the Superintendent, the latter gave him his opinion, which was simply that he was an impostor and a fraud, and Mr. KELSO has not seen or heard of him since, except to get occasional glimpses of him while conversing with detectives, who all characterize FELCKER as a humbug.

The report in yesterday's TIMES states that FELCKER was in possession of a diamond stud and a locket, but Superintendent KELSO states that he never exhibited those articles when consulting in the matter, but instead exhibited a bit of old linen which he stated was a piece of a bloody shirt. As the murdered man's garments were all intact when the crime was committed, no heed was paid by the officials to this article of fragment. The statement that FELCKER is a member of Col. WHITLEY's Detective Force is denied by that gentleman, who states that he understands that FELCKER is connected with a Western private detective agency. It would thus appear that the FELCKER clue, like all others in the case, is an unsuccessful and worthless one. It may be well to say here that ever since the death of Mr. JOURDAN both Judge DOWLING and Superintendent KELSO, his old and tried friends, have sedulously carried out the plan of operations commenced by that lamented officer, and that they do not yet despair of ultimate success.

The Rogers Murder Case—Improbability of Pinto's Story.

The report that comes from Auburn State Prison to the effect that FRANCIS E. PINTO, a notorious thief and desperate ruffian, now in confinement in that prison, had confessed himself to be the murderer of Mr. CHARLES ROGERS, cannot be relied upon as affording any solution of the mystery surrounding the killing of Mr. ROGERS. In the first place PINTO is a habitual [illegible] frequently been arrested [illegible] bery, and through the connivance of political friends always succeeded in eluding punishment. When PINTO assaulted a pane of plate-glass in the Park Bank with a large iron [illegible] charged of $2,000, he [illegible] [illegible] certain Aldermen, immediately to take bail, [illegible] no papers of any kind except a simple charge, could be found. PINTO was sent to State Prison for the bank robbery, as it appears that he is in solitary confinement for misconduct, it is believed by Police officials in this City that he has concocted the Rogers story in order to escape punishment. It may be well to here that the late JOHN KOURNEN, as well Superintendent KELSO and other Police officers having cognizance of the inner workings of the Rogers murder case, were of the opinion, at the time of JAMES LOGAN's death, at the hands of JERRY BURN, that LOGAN was the real murderer. The evidence in the case, as given by Capt. ALLAIRE was very clear against LOGAN, but the stupidity of the Coroner having charge of the case so completely thwarted him in investigation that LOGAN's mistress and a ROBERTALLE, the only witnesses, were not were permitted to go unhindered. All of PINTO's statements will probably prove worthless, it is unreasonable to suppose that a desperado like him would voluntarily exchange a gaudy term in the State Prison for the gallows, even if guilty of the murder.

THE EXILES OF ERIN.

Further Preparations for their Reception—Action of the United Irishmen.

A large and influential meeting of delegates from the different sections of the United Irishmen of New-York, Brooklyn and Jersey City, under the auspices of District No. Six, was held yesterday afternoon at Germania Hall, No. 271 Third-avenue, for the purpose of participating in the movement originated in the Common Council of tendering a hearty welcome to the released Irish political prisoners. Mr. RICHARD MCCLOUD, a member of the Directory, was moved to the chair. On motion, a Committee was appointed to confer with the Common Council, with a view to assist them in the undertaking, and obtain a proper position for the Society in the procession.

The Committee on Resolutions presented the following, which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Some of the bravest and best of those who have perilled all for Ireland, and suffered all that the perverted ingenuity of their enemies could devise, are soon about to arrive in our midst; and,

Whereas, It is but right and just that they should be tendered a reception commensurate with the extent of their sufferings, or at least such as would compensate them to some extent for all the weary hours passed in the dreary dungeons, cut off from all communication with the world; and,

Whereas, These living martyrs of freedom have been transported by all lovers of liberty as eminently entitled to all the honor and honors which it is in our power to confer on them, and to that end various movements are now in progress to tender to the illustrious exiles a suitable reception; and,

Whereas, As members of an organization having for its fundamental object the union of all men of Irish birth and their descendants in one solid body, the co-operation of their children for the freedom of Ireland and the establishment of a republic on the ruins of the despotism under which our country groans, as enemies to monarchical power and advocates of universal liberty throughout the world, behold in the noble patriots who now approach the shores of America martyrs true and tried in the cause of human freedom; and,

Whereas, It becomes the duty of all earnest Irish nationalists to exhibit by their presence at the demonstration proposed to be tendered to them on their arrival in New-York how much they have appreciated the sterling honesty, truth and patriotism of our expatriated countrymen, and to show how much the feelings of the United Irishmen are in unison with theirs for the cause of our suffering land, be it

Resolved, That the members of United Irishmen do attend as a body to welcome our fellow-suffering exiles, to do them the utmost honor for their endurance while subject to the terrible laws of the hereditary enemy of our race, and that we exhibit in this demonstration by our demeanor and deportment the ardent love we bear for our native land, as well as our hatred of her oppressors.

Resolved, That it is the sense of all good men and true in the ranks of United Irishmen, that we call on all the patriotic sons of Erin, in this vicinity, to show by the welcome they extend to our brothers who have suffered for our sake, that they are not ready to do and dare for Ireland, and that they have been ground beneath the heel of the oppressor.

It was also resolved to tender the members of the General Committee of Tammany Hall the thanks of the Society, after which the meeting adjourned.

The Irish Brigade Officers' Association.

This Association met, yesterday, at 2 P. M., at Sweeney's Hotel. Col. MCMAHON, of Tammany Hall, was introduced, and announced that the City authorities had undertaken to carry out the entire programme, and that the affair had assumed too gigantic proportions for any smaller organization or organizations to attempt. It would be a grander turnout than on St. Patrick's Day, as many societies would appear now that did not usually on the anniversary of Erin.

FASHIONS FOR JANUARY.

In anticipation of the approaching festive season, I promised last month a few details on evening dresses; and a visit to one of the principal French artistes de modes now in town will enable me, I hope, to satisfy my fair readers on that subject. Thus, silk tunics of all colors will be worn over white tulle or muslin skirts, according as occasion requires. For instance, for a small and early party a silk tunic of any color, even black, with a low square body, will be considered sufficient dress, even if worn over a high white muslin dress. For a quadrille party the under dress may be of grenadine or tarlatan, but for a ball it must be of tulle. When the bottom dress is muslin, one deep flounce of tarlatan or grenadine, on the contrary, has generally from five to seven narrow plaited flounces on the skirt, while a tulle skirt is invariably puffed more than half way up, with flowers sometimes scattered among the puffs, or bouillonnés, as I should rather say. The tunics are made in various ways; some are made merely like a plain skirt, being looped up to form puffs and folds by flowers or bows of ribbon, as occasion requires. I need not add that flowers are only employed for very large parties, and that ribbons are admissible at all times and in all places. Another favorite form of tunic is the sash tunic. This is made en tablier in front, then plaited in at the sides to the back width, which are very long and full, and are looped up in their turn so as to imitate huge bows and sash. This tunic looks very pretty on slim figures, and should be trimmed with a deep fringe or lace, and fringe mixed, of same color as tunic. For young girls the bodies should be low squares with no sleeves, merely a shoulder-strap with fringe or lace to fall over the arm. Of course, there is a muslin or tulle body beneath the tunic body, with short puffed sleeve.

For quiet parties, a low square body, with sleeve to the elbow, is preferred to the simple shoulder-straps, and then the elbow is trimmed round with frills to match the under-skirt. But for quite young girls the shoulder-strap alone is preferred. It is not essential that the under-skirt should be white; it may, when made of tulle, be of the same color as tunic. I saw one dress which looked remarkably pretty. It was composed of a pea-green tulle skirt, puffed half way up with tulle bouillonnés and tea roses scattered among the bouillonnés. Over this a straight green silk tunic with an embroidery of tea-roses round the hem, and looped at the sides with bunches of tea-roses. Low square body, with embroidery of tea-roses round top and shoulder-strap; a little puffed tulle sleeve beneath. A bunch of tea-roses on shoulder, back of waist and hair, with long spray falling half down the back, and another little rose at the bottom of the spray.

Another dress I observed was a white grenadine skirt, with five flounces at the bottom and one pink frill front and back; the front frill ends at the back, trimmed round with pink satin pipings and a handsome deep pink silk fringe. The body was square of course, trimmed round with satin piping and fringe, and the sleeves came to the elbow, trimmed with piping and fringe, and deep white grenadine plaited frills beneath. A rose with one leaf only in the hair, and a black velvet with locket round the neck. Long gloves and double bracelets—i. e., a pair of bracelets, one on each arm over the gloves.

This revival of bracelets in pairs is daily growing in favor, and are worn with long or short sleeves, either over a tight sleeve or a long glove.

Before I finish with evening dress, I must remind my readers that the old-fashioned low body down at the shoulders is seldom if ever seen at present. At the largest ball the low square body is preferred, and considered more dressy and comme il faut than its discarded rival.

White muslin tunics, with bodies V shape, and edged with frills or lace, are still much worn over black or colored silk skirts for family parties, and is a very cool and economical way of wearing out a soiled silk dress. With this kind of dress a sash should be worn, the sash coming as under skirt, and bows at the elbows and in the hair to match; also a ribbon with locket round the neck.

High gloves still continue to be worn; which, with sleeves to elbows, almost hide the arm. That certainly is a pity, for a pretty arm is a thing to admire, and that is now somewhat rare. That, by the bye, may be one of the reasons which has brought in the fashion for hiding it—though this is scarcely in accordance with the on dits current respecting our future fashions, which, rumor says, are likely to return to the old Greek models. Certainly if a Republic be proclaimed after the war is ended. Such a consummation would astonish no one acquainted with the history of the first Republic. Republicans were ever advocates of crops and classic—to wit, the Roundheads, who forswore long locks; and the French Revolutionists, who discarded the hated hoops and powdered wigs of Royalists, and bade their women drape in antique Greek statues, until they copied them so well that a return to a little more drapery was deemed expedient, even by the loudest admirer of plastic beauty. Nature was all very well, but a little art was found to be necessary after all.

The reversible satins, of which I wrote some months ago, are gradually gaining ground in England, and can be had at some of our best establishments. They cannot be too well recommended; for they are not merely pretty and original, but they are economical—i.e., when one side is soiled they can be turned, and then make quite a new dress, and no trimming but the material itself is required in making them up. For instance, you may have a gray and blue stripe on one side, and a gray and maroon on the reverse side; or, two shades of blue on one side, and two shades of gray on the other; and the definition, according to the taste of the wearer. The shades, stripes of one color, perhaps make up better than shades of different colors; but, by any case, the effect is novel, and reversible silks and satins bid fair to temporarily all others in a short time. Some of these reversible silks are of alternate velvet and satin stripes, and others are grain of satin and silk stripes, while others are all velvet, satin or silk. The prettiest are the alternate satin and silk stripes; and, in this case, the silk stripe should always be of the lightest shade—as, when a white stripe is used, white.

Next to the reversible stripes, the Pompadour chines and brocades are likely to resume a portion of their once-famed popularity—though young people should never wear brocade. They may, however, wear a chine tunic over a white, or cream-colored—pattern muslin, and the combination will look most distinguished. In this case, however, the tunic should be perfectly plain, and only looped up at sides with flowers to match the pattern on chine; a chine fringe may edge the tunic and trim the body; chine ribbon bows on shoulder, and an ornament in the hair, but no flowers.

Brocaded dresses look stately for elderly ladies, and when covered with a white yak lace tunic are very dressy, and fit for any occasion. Ornaments, but not flowers, should be worn with brocaded dresses.

Even velvet dresses, covered with lace tunics, are considered highly elegant. These tunics look best looped up at back with colored ribbon, when worn over velvets or plain silks.

Velvet becomes more in favor from day to day, and, next to satin, for trimming, velvet is preferred to all others for velvet dresses.

I saw a pretty walking costume at the palace not long ago. It was of gray silk rep, trimmed with rows of velvet half way up the skirt, with a tunic likewise trimmed with several rows of velvet, and looped up at sides with large velvet bows and ends, and a large bow with short ends at waist at back. Loose square jacket, with hanging sleeves trimmed with velvet. Black velvet hat with gray feather. Black sable boa and muff.—Le Journal des Mode.

HON. JOHN COVODE.

His Political Career as Described by Himself—Interesting Reminiscences.

The letter written last Spring by the late Hon. JOHN COVODE declining a renomination for Congress, will renewedly possess interest now in view of his recent death, and we therefore reproduce it below:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 15, 1870.

D. W. Shryock, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: In answer to inquiries relative to my being a candidate for Congress again, I would say that for different reasons, some of which I will state, I will not submit to renomination.

One of the reasons which induce me to decline further honors is that some aspirants have turned their backs upon the party, because I stood in their way, while a few others have turned their backs upon me because I could not secure them office. But I am happy to say that no one has ever charged me with infidelity to the great cause in which we have been engaged.

In looking over a list of the members of the Thirty-fourth Congress, being the one I first entered, I find that nearly half its members are now in their graves, including from Pennsylvania, THOM, BROOMS, FULLER, ROBINSON, KNIGHT and RICHRD; and of the 109 that voted for HANKS in that great struggle, there remain in the present Congress only BUFFINGTON, KINNEAR, KELSEY, C. C. WASHBURN and MYERS—HANKS also being a member of this Congress—six in all; and, as each of them has been out longer than I have, it makes me the father of the House that I entered on the great struggle to preserve the rights of white men in the Territories, resulting in freeing four and a half millions of colored persons, giving them political rights and endowing them with a suffrage, a privilege not even then contemplated. And we now find the old slave-holders appealing to those that were once their slaves for their votes. What a revolution, and what sacrifices have been made to accomplish it!

While none of the members of either House fell in battle on the Union side, except Col. BAKER, there were quite a number fell on the rebel side, including some of the worst fire-eaters, such as BARKSDALE, KEITT, BRANCH, ZOLLICOFFER and others. Of the active men in the Banks struggle, SHERMAN, MORRILL and CRAGIN, now in the Senate; COLFAX, Vice-President; WASHBURNE, Minister in Paris; BURLINGAME, after having risen to eminent distinction as a diplomatist, fell a victim to disease at St. Petersburg last Winter, and his remains are now on their way to the State he has so much honored; SPINNER, Treasurer of the United States, and ALLISON, Register of the same; ISRAEL WASHBURN has since been Governor of Maine, and PRINGLE on a mission abroad; GIDDINGS, the great fleleader, is in his grave; as well as BENSON of Vermont, &c. Of the Senators I was well acquainted with in the Thirty-fourth Congress, BELL, BROADHEAD, BUTLER, CASS, C. C. CLAY, CLAYTON, COLLAMER, CRITTENDEN, DOUGLAS, FESSENDEN, FOOTE, HOUSTON and others, are no more, and none of the living remain in the Senate except HAMLIN, HARLAN, SUMNER and WILSON, while SEWARD, who was then the great leader, has had a checkered course since that time.

Now, in view of the fact that the great struggle for human progress, for which I enlisted, has been fought and won by the friends of human rights, slavery and despotism having been overturned, the power of the Government vindicated and shown to be more than equal to cope with all its enemies, and the Government been fully reconstructed, I rest content that new issues will arise—such as finance, taxes, tariff, expansion and other questions that will necessarily divide the old column, and that nearly all my old associates, with whom I acted when I first went into Congress, are dead or scattered, family ties having been severed by the war; that I have had to mourn the loss of my first-born son, who gave his life for his country, with three hundred and fifty thousand others, who were necessarily sacrificed to save the life of the nation.

I feel it now not only my duty, but a pleasure, to withdraw from a contest that has been embittered against me by the Democratic Party, because I felt it to be my duty to investigate their frauds and corruptions in their vile subsidies to the slave power in their Kansas policy; and for doing this they have pursued me ever since with a vindictive feeling that no other man in the country has had to endure. But I have proven them to be guilty of all I charged them with; have been able to overpower them in every contest I have had with them, whether in the district, in the State, or in the Federal Capitol.

Without boastfulness, but as a servant giving an account of his stewardship, I take the liberty of saying to my constituents that I have been honored by my associates in Congress, in being called upon to serve on very important committees. Beside my investigation, which Mr. LINCOLN said, "finished the Democratic Party as a national one," I was selected to serve on the Committee on the Conduct of the War, and thus made an associate with Mr. LINCOLN and his Cabinet in matters pertaining to the war. I was honored by being the associate of the noble old BEN. WADE on that committee—a truer man to his country never lived—and with CHANDLER, with his strong impulses, but always in the right when the enemies of the Government were to be dealt with. This was one of the most important committees ever organized in the Government. But many of its secrets can never be published. I was then selected to go South to aid in working out reconstruction, and always in close relationship with that great statesman STANTON, to whom the nation owes so much for his services.

And now, in conclusion, I wish to tender my thanks to a confiding constituency, who have stood by and sustained me by their votes for the last twenty years, in a way that no other man has been sustained, and without which I would not have succeeded. Very truly yours,

JOHN COVODE.

Accident on the Poughkeepsie and Eastern Railroad.—Narrow Escape.

From the Poughkeepsie Eagle, Jan. 14.

An accident which came near resulting fatally, occurred on the Poughkeepsie and Eastern Railroad about 9 o'clock on Friday morning, the following being the full particulars, as gathered by us from the engineer and fireman of the train: As the morning train from Stanford was approaching the crossing near the lamp blacking factory, a short distance from the city, backing down, the engineer of the locomotive No. 2, Mr. CASH, discovered a horse and wagon on the crossing. He gave the alarm, and used all in his power to prevent a collision, but it proved of no avail. The wagon was struck by the tender and smashed literally to pieces. The horse attached to it being injured in such a manner that he died in a short time after. Strange to say, the occupant, a man named WM. VAN WAGNER, aged seventy-five years, was found to be but slightly injured. How he escaped from being instantly killed is a mystery to all connected with the train. The blame cannot be attached to the engineer, as the whistle was sounded the usual distance from the crossing and every available means taken to prevent a collision. Mr. VAN WAGNER, when asked why he did not keep off the track, said he could not make his horse either go forward or backward. As it is, the accident is one that could not be prevented. While writing on the subject, we would state that the engineers on the road are troubled considerably with teams attempting to cross the track in front of their trains, and it is a wonder that more accidents have not occurred. Let this be a warning.

Melancholy Accident—Two Brothers Killed.

From the Poughkeepsie Eagle, Jan. 14.

During Wednesday forenoon an accident of a shocking nature occurred on the New-York and Harlem Railroad, near Chappaqua, Westchester County, by which two brothers, named JOHN and GEORGE QUIMBY, aged respectively thirty and twenty-one years, lost their lives. From the meagre information furnished regarding the casualty it would appear that the deceased parties were crossing the railroad track in a wagon, when they were struck by the locomotive of a gravel train, which was then running at a high rate of speed. The force of the collision dashed the horse and vehicle literally to atoms, instantly killing JOHN QUIMBY, while his brother, who was taken up insensible, remained in that condition until Thursday morning, when he expired. The deceased were sons of REUBEN QUIMBY, Ex-Postmaster at the village of Sing Sing.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

At the Exchange on Saturday, Jan. 14, the attendance was limited, and although no business in City or suburban property was transacted, a sale was made which attracted some attention. A. J. BLEECKER, SON & CO., at a trustee's sale, disposed of all the right, title and interest in and to the property known as the "Central Gold Mine," located in Colorado, together with the buildings, machinery and appurtenances belonging thereto. The auction has been quite extensively advertised for some months past in the Western Press, but here in New-York little real knowledge existed as to the intrinsic value of the property offered. The bidding was, therefore, tame, and but comparatively little interest was manifested. Before the sale, proposals were entered in the name of the President of the Company and others, forbidding further proceedings, but without effect, however, as the mine was finally struck off to JACOB L. SKYRON for $2,400, it being understood that he was the purchaser in the interests of the bondholders. No details could be learned of the transaction.

During the week past the sales at the Exchange have been few in number, all but one made by order of the Courts, and in no case particularly noticeable in their character. The prices realized in each instance, however, have been fair, giving no evidence of the predicted serious decline in the market. In the business transacted some general interest has been evinced, but there has been nothing to indicate that holders of property are anxious to dispose of the same, or that at present any trouble is anticipated. On the contrary, there has been a steady feeling, while freely admitting that business is dull, look forward to a stronger market, and apparently feel confident that as the Spring approaches greater activity will prevail. The following figures represent the volume of business at the Exchange for each of the public sales every week: Monday, Jan. 9, $416,000; Tuesday, Jan. 10, $117,000; Thursday, Jan. 12, $20,450. The total business of the week aggregates $62,450 as against $65,175 for the week previous, ending Saturday, Jan. 7. The auctioneers engaged in sales during the week were A. J. BLEECKER, SON & CO., JAMES M. MILLER and ROBERTS & MCGUIRE.

For the present week quite a number of auctions are already advertised, and business promises to be better than for some time past. The most important sales, and those to which attention is directed, are as follows: On Wednesday, MULLER, WILKINS & CO., by order of the Supreme Court in partition, will dispose of a large lot of valuable improved City property. This sale is one of great importance, as it has been looked forward to for two weeks past as likely to determine, in a measure, the course of the market for the year. The greater part of the property is desirably located, all improved, and most of it adapted for business purposes. It belongs to the estate of JACOB CRAM, deceased, and is sold to close the estate, under the direction of HENRY NICOLL, referee. Being a legal sale, an open market is insured and a fair competition will therefore result. The terms are liberal, and in any event, the attendance on the day of the auction cannot fail to be a large one. The following property is comprised in the schedule of the sale: Five four-story stores and lots on the north-east corner of Broadway and Twenty-first-street, Nos. 922, 924, 926, 928, and 930 Broadway, the entire plot having a front on Broadway of over 102 feet; four-story marble and brick house and lot, with stable on the rear, on north-east corner of Fourth-avenue and Seventeenth-street, opposite the Everett House and Union-square, 28 by 112 feet; two stores and lots on the northerly side of Canal-street, between Wooster and Laurens streets, Nos. 365 and 367 Canal-street; eleven three-story and attic brick buildings and lots on the westerly side of Wooster-street, 72.4 feet north of Canal-street, Nos. 1, 3, 5, 7, 9, 11, 13, 15, 17, 19, 21 and 23 Wooster-street, having a front of 225 feet on Wooster-street, and nine four-story brick houses and lots on the easterly side of Laurens-street, in the rear of the lots on Wooster-street, Nos. 2, 4, 6, 8, 10, 12, 14, 16 and 18 Laurens-street, making together a front of 172.6 feet on Laurens-street. That the above auction is one of decided interest can well be seen.

On Wednesday, also, at the Exchange, ROBERTS & MCGUIRE, under the direction of D. P. INGRAHAM, Jr., Esq., referee in foreclosure, will dispose of the five-story and cellar brick house (with store) and lot known as No. 622 Second-avenue, north-east corner Thirty-fourth-street. This street is 100 feet wide, and has ferry and railroad connection with all parts of Long Island. Also the four-story and finished Dock and Garrison streets, and also four houses and lots in the rear of the above, connected with Front street by an alley-way. In addition to the sales noticed, quite a number of others are bulletined to take place, and, as has been said, the week bids fair to be one of marked business activity.

At private sale desirable property continues to be offered in large quantities, and our columns yesterday contained a long list of such offerings. Houses and lots elegibly situated were so advertised by V. M. STEVENSON, SON & CO., No. 11 Pine-street; FRANK G. & DAVISON BROWN, No. 189 Broadway; WARD & OGDEN, Broadway, corner Seventeenth-street; HATCH & RIKER, No. 1,329 Broadway; B. S. LEVY & CO., No. 271 West Thirty-eighth-street, near Eighth-avenue; W. P. SEYMOUR, No. 171 Broadway, and ISAAC HONIG, No. 24 Pine-street.

JOHN MCCLAVE, real estate broker, No. 44 Pine-street, reports having recently effected the following transfer at private sale at the price annexed: Eight full-sized lots, on the west side of Eighth-avenue, comprising the entire block front between One Hundred and Twenty-fifth and One Hundred and Twenty-sixth streets, sold for $45,000. As this is one of the best located pieces of property for business purposes above Central Park, the price may be considered a low one.

WM. H. RAYNOR, No. 5½ Pine-street, reports having sold four lots on the south-east corner of Fifth-avenue and Ninety-first-street, and one lot in the rear, each lot 25x100, for $88,000. Mr. RAYNOR also reports the sale by another house (name not given) of eight full lots on the south side of Sixty-fourth-street, 200 feet east of Madison-avenue, for $82,000, or at the rate of $10,250 per lot. This property is to be immediately improved by the erection of first-class houses.

Preaching by One of the Ecclesiastical Exiles of Hungary—Thrilling Sketches of the Catholic Persecutions in Austria.

A Voice of Warning.

[illegible] a large and eager audience to hear [illegible] OSCAR HUGO, at the Clermont-avenue Normal Church, of Brooklyn, yesterday morning. Mr. HUGO founded his remarks upon the sentence: "Preach the Word." In turning over the pages of ecclesiastical history and Scripture, he said, one need have no hesitancy in [illegible] a clear understanding of the duties [illegible] by this command, and the limit of its application. We are to preach the Word as far as the influence of sin extend and as far as the message of God penetrate. The sins of this earth [illegible] all the lands, and the mercies of God [illegible] to every creature. In view of this [illegible] duty, how can there be seen poor [illegible] ignorant creatures as they are—who will dare to stand up in open opposition? And yet there are men, even governments and [illegible], who deny that the Word [illegible] be preached, and enforce that interdiction by banishment, imprisonment and death. In Europe, they who claimed to be Christian Churches, professing to hold to their hands the power of salvation and damnation, were formerly holding back the sacred Word of Christ, but thanks to the events of the last three years their power in that hand is broken forever. But they were throwing all their influence into the new country of the West, trying to overshadow cherished institutions. We don't care what they want to see, don't dare to see, for from a political point it isn't policy to see. Upon what grounds does the Catholic power claim the exclusion of the Bible from our schools? That the Bible is a Protestant sectarian book? This I deny. I was educated in a Roman Catholic college; am well versed in the Latin Bible—better, in fact, than in the English—and there is no difference between them. I am aware that Father [illegible], of Brooklyn, has said that we have mutilated it, that we have altered and changed and supplied, until there is nothing left of it but the covers. He knows very well that he can tell such yarns to his ignorant hearers, but he wouldn't attempt to tell them to men who have evidence at their fingers's ends. The Bible in our schools and Sunday-schools keeps children out of the prison and the poorhouse. But, say the opponents of the Bible in our schools, it is cruelty to our conscience. This is all well enough for them to talk about in this country of perfect liberty, but was this plea ever heard in Rome or Austria? Conscience seems to be made out of India-rubber—very elastic and sensitive in this country, but where was their conscience in the case of Northern Italy, in France, in Spain, and in Holland, where thousands were put to the rack because they could not conscientiously believe as their rulers, and were tortured to death, with all the refinements of torture, in Holland, in the name of conscience, all Protestant Christians and sons of Calvin, although of purely French ancestry, was compelled to attend Catholic college, study the Catholic catechism, undergo in sundry sprinklings, crossmarkings, &c., and where he was kept imprisoned each week from Thursday night to Saturday morning for fear he would go home to his Protestant mother and read her the Bible. There is no compulsion in the Gospel of Christ which says "come, ye blessed of my Father," not "come, ye blessed of the Pope." By this infamous concordat Protestant marriages were declared illegal, the children of such marriages were declared illegitimate, and deprived of all political rights. In 1848 and 1849, when the great struggle took place in Hungary, which shook the throne of HAPSBURG's tyranny, the concordat was abolished, and Protestants mounted to the summits of power. Did they retaliate upon their Catholic oppressors? Oh, no; but was not Christ-like, and they betrayed into the rights of conscience. Years later, when Russia sent half a million of hirelings to overwhelm Hungary, the Catholics were restored to power, and then came the reign of cruelty that sent the speaker into exile and condemned his venerable father to death by confinement in a subterranean dungeon, simply because they had dared to petition the Emperor FRANCIS JOSEPH for the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience. In convention at Pesth in 1861, 1,017 ministers and laymen signed the petition. The answer came in the form of a battery of artillery, a squadron of cavalry and a battalion of infantry. Imprisonment and death was the fate of many, and the speaker, along with 800 others, was forever exiled from his native land. Four hundred and seventeen of them soon after landed upon the shores of England and Scotland, penniless, friendless, penniless; exiled by that power which claims the right to exclude the Bible from our schools in this country, all for the sake of conscience. The battle of Sadowa turned the scale. Once more the concordat is abolished, and only a short time since the speaker received notice that his imperial majesty had pardoned him, on the proviso that he would sign a document that he had been guilty of treason, but that in future he would be a dutiful subject of the Crown. Will I become a creeping, sneaking slave? continued the speaker. Never! May my hand wither and my tongue be paralyzed if I sign it. I am not willing to accept another home; here I will stay. This beautiful land is my foster mother; I nestle in her bosom. Foreigners, you who have sought the shelter of the American flag, let us hear no more complaints for conscience sake. If you can't be comfortable in American conscience, go back to the lands from whence you came, and we'll help you pay your passage. The Bible is our guiding star, the free schools are a lamp to our feet, the Constitution is the charter of our liberties. Touch them not. Dare not to insult the flag that protects you. In all, and above all, let us cling to the Bible—cling to it like the iron to the magnet, like the sun-flower to the mother of the planets—and God will bless us.

Man's Duty to his Neighbors—Happiness and Not Sorrow the Result of Christianity—Sermon by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher.

At Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, yesterday morning, Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER preached on the duty of Christians to their neighbors. Before entering upon his discourse he said: "I am obliged to ask your indulgence today in the matter of speaking. I have a cold which has settled upon my lungs. I have had it two days. I don't know when I got it. I hope to get rid of it in one day more. I shall not, on account of it, preach to-night, but shall preach this morning, as well as I can, and that will answer every end of curiosity or affection among my audience."

Mr. BEECHER took for his text the second and third verses of the fifteenth chapter of Philippians: "Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good, to edification. For even Christ pleased not himself." The human soul, he said, is like a garden belonging to an old neglected mansion. It is full of excellent things run to waste. There are vines unpruned and fruit-trees covered with moss and canker, and thickets of roses and thickets of thorns, thickets of vines and of nettles, rank and noisome weeds as well as fair flowers. Now, it is the business of a garden to be wholesome, sweet and beautiful; of it has no right to have weeds in it, nor to have its beautiful things dilapidated. It is made on purpose to confer pleasure and profit. Thus it is with the soul of man; it is full of good dispositions, of kind impulses, of true affections and wholesome fruits; but, beside these, in the mind of man is full of fires, murmurings, stinging nettles of pride and vanities, wearing stolen goods. The soul's power to produce pleasure or pain in another is very great. If it throw over another the whole force of its excellence and its beauty, it is enabled to spread great cheer and great delight, but if it is allowed to become a central and selfish, it is capable of producing very great pain and trouble. We are commanded, therefore, so to use the whole of ourselves as that from day to day we shall produce pleasure among those with whom we come in contact. It is not left optional whether men shall be made happier by our coming among them; it is not left to us to produce pleasure on occasional moments, it is a command that includes the whole run of our nature, and the whole of our time, that we are to live in such a way that wherever we go we shall please those we come in contact with, and make them in such a way that they will be more manly than they were before. The reason and general adaptability is full of materials from which to select instruments for pleasing. The affections are full of sweetness, as the honeycomb of honey; it is sweet, it is taste, it is imagination—that beautiful estimer of pleasure—these are just as strong to produce discontent and irritation as they are to confer general happiness. Besides the great things which men are commanded to seek, either manhood or general moral excellence, there is this distinct command that they shall so carry themselves in the whole business of life that they shall make all around them happy. We are deliberately to cast out from ourselves every element that makes needless pain, and we are to cultivate and employ all those elements which make pleasure, which make our fellow men happier. Making people happy is no small thing; 'tis important business. Good nature, as we regard it, is one of the richest and ripest fruits of a true Christian life. Do I regard the making of people round about me happy as one of the best manifestations of [illegible] Christian disposition which we are commanded to wear as a garment. In our Lord's own life it is manifest that he did, day by day, a multitude of things for the express purpose of soothing the trouble and calming the vexation of others. The example thus set is expressly alluded to in the text, and held up for our imitation. Men when cast down by trouble are unable to excite their own better nature. The undertone of human life is very sad; it is cheerless, solitary and voiceless, and under the weight put upon it, of of necessity droops and bended. It is therefore our duty as Christians to shed sunlight over the darkness, and to give to nobler action the wasted energies of these unfortunate souls. It is not simply our duty to make known the historical Gospel; it is not simply our duty to go out after men whose lives average but little sweetness, but it is our duty to please them and make them happier. If we have a purpose to serve, we understand how to proceed; but Christianity demands that we shall become the servants of these lowly ones from motives of pure benevolence. The lower men are, the greater is the chance of working upon their higher nature. The power of some of BEETHOVEN's symphonies to soothe the troubled breast and arouse all that is pure in the human soul, can only be understood by those who have experienced their delightful effects; but how dull and spiritless are all earthly instruments when compared with the loving, truly Christian soul. Some men move through life like a band of music through the streets of a city, flinging out pleasure on every side to all that can listen; and some women, cheering all their houses like honey-suckle, all the whole surrounding neighborhood with perfume. How great a blessing is such a man to his family, how one as once remarks [illegible]

[illegible] to Mr. [illegible] for [illegible] as it were, the seeds of [illegible] There are many good men and women who are guilty of a moment of stolidness which leads them to express a contempt for mere happiness-making [illegible] that that is good enough in its way, but they [illegible] to nothing when compared to the work of making them better. They say, "Reform them, and their happiness will take care of itself." They undervalue the moral results of making men happy, for much of sin springs from unhappiness, and that which makes men happy tends to make them better morally. At this point Mr. BEECHER branched off into a consideration of the subject in some of its more particular aspects as exemplified in private and public life, and said that while at times it might be a matter of duty to utter unpalatable truths, it was still our duty to please our neighbors in the manner least calculated to give offence. At one time it was the solemn duty of the Catholics to hate all heretics, and the latter very naturally responded in a similar manner. In fact, the impression seemed to be abroad that the only way to make men love God was by clubbing them into a pious state of mind. This, however, was all wrong, and it was now time that we tried the effect of love and kindness. He referred to that class of beings who, after having become religious, become also gloomy and uncompanionable, and said that wherever such an effect was produced, we might be sure that there was something radically wrong in the man, for the true tendency of Christianity is to make life bright and happy.

The Belief of the Unbelievers—A Lecture by Rev. Mr. Frothingham.

Yesterday morning Rev. O. B. FROTHINGHAM lectured at Lyric Hall on "The Belief of the Unbelievers, or the Skeptic's Creed." He said that he would read this lecture in place of his usual Sunday sermon. He commenced by quoting from a Swendenborgian work, published some thirty years ago, a graphic description of the vast desert existing between the Mississippi River and the Rocky Mountains. Now, he said, the Pacific Railroad passes through this section of country, but travelers declare that this howling wilderness is not to be found. So the ancient Empire, before the Christian era, had been likened to this vast desert, where nothing good existed and where all was evil, but RENAN and other writers had adduced abundant proof that in Rome at this period good laws were made and rigorously enforced, vice was frowned upon, and virtue supported, many men and women led a life of purity, sought after truth, bore the common ills to which humanity is subject as patiently as we do now, and endeavored in every way to render themselves examples to their fellow-citizens. Mr. FROTHINGHAM then went on to speak of the leading infidels and skeptics, so-called, and briefly narrated the principles which they defended, commencing with the Germans and ending with VOLPAIRE and TOM PAINE. He showed by quotations from their written works that they had all inculcated charity and forbearance toward their fellow-men, and that most of them had endeavored, so far as they had the power, to better the condition of the poorer classes. VOLTAIRE had labored unwearedly for years in defending persons who had been unjustly accused. DIDEROT had refused wealth, the comforts of life and personal safety rather than recant the opinions he had expressed. Others had spent their money in bettering the condition of the laboring classes. Now, there was no unjustly accused by many who had never read a single line of his writings, had given up all for what he believed to be the truth. How much had this man done for his adopted country? He it was who struck the keynote of the Revolution, and when the crisis came it was he who infused new life into the cause, and by his wise and fervent words, kept men from giving up in despair. Had PAINE lived in this age, he would have been classed with that noble writer, THEODORE PARKER. At the present day our sentimentalism gain an easy reputation by expressing at second-hand the opinions of ROUSSEAU and VOLTAIRE on the goodness and liberality of the Supreme Being. Yet, these men were called skeptics, atheists and infidels, simply because they sought for the truth rather than take for granted what had already been written. He further showed that the disciples of these men had not been unhappy ones, and that at the last moment their minds had been filled with noble and elevating sentiments. He concluded by expressing the hope that no true American would forget the services rendered by PAINE to this country, and that none would judge these men unheard.

Rev. E. H. Chapin on Italian Unity.

Rev. E. H. CHAPIN, at the Church of the Divine Paternity, yesterday delivered an eloquent sermon from the text, "Be ye perfect"—Matthew, fifth chapter, forty-eighth verse. The reverend gentleman said that to be perfect in its fullest sense was to be perfect in love, in religion, for religion was founded and grounded in love. Religion does not mean the mere punctilious performance of a formal round of duties. The great thought with many people in regard to a religious life was, that a man must be stern, inflexible, unbending. How often do you hear it said, that praise, all praise must be given to a man who is stern, and whose will-power cannot be swerved. Such a mulish, obstinate man, who will not listen to any appeal of love, to any light of better life or of a higher will, but bent and determined to pursue his course if hell secreted him in the undertaking—such a man was not one to be loved, nor was he a religious man in its deepest, truest, fullest sense. In the course of his remarks Dr. CHAPIN said that he was in full sympathy with the meeting held during the past week, to send a word of cheer trumpet-toned from free America to the shores of Italy. That meeting was intensely charged with Protestant ideas, yet he believed that the Roman Church would in the future rejoice that taken from it was the power of governing the State, that to it could no longer be ascribed mercenary motives of mere physical power, but that its spiritual glory left in its purest essences, it would be better capacitated for the Christian work of perfection.

The Most Offer of Marriage—Sermon by Rev. John Quincy Adams.

Rev. JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, pastor of the Baptist Church, corner of Madison and Gouverneur streets, preached last evening to a large and attentive congregation. He took his text from the forty-fifth Psalm, tenth and eleventh verses: "Hearken, O daughter, and consider and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people and thy father's house. So shall the King greatly desire thy beauty; for he is thy Lord; and worship thou him."

During the introductory exercises, the reverend gentleman read the rather lengthy history of the betrothal of Isaac and Rebecca, as contained in the twenty-fourth chapter of Genesis. He commenced his discourse by alluding to the great variety of metaphors to be found scattered all through the sacred writings. He called attention to the kindness and even tenderness manifested at the beginning of the text—"Hearken, oh daughter." Christ when upon earth, was uniformly tender and considerate in his mode of salutation, even with the worst classes. He said, "Daughter, be of good cheer;" to the vile woman who, prostrated at his feet, washed them with her tears and wiped them with the hair of her head. God did not upbraid sinners or reproach them harshly, although He had the right, and might very justly do so. The speaker sought to impress upon his hearers the importance of giving up all for Christ, and of being spiritually wedded to Him. The offer made by the Savior he considered as the best marriage offer ever made, or that could be made. He said: Many of you young women have no doubt listened to the voice of sin and pleasure. The voice of human affection has come to many of you. To some of those voices you have listened. But here is a story of love, love that surpasses all human love combined. Jesus came to suffer and die—such was his great and unspeakable love. In the exhortation of the text there is consideration demanded. God does not ask any one to embark in His service without due meditation. The blessed spirit when it comes to woo you to Christ, asks you to consider. If you would not enter the earthly marriage state hastily, how much more necessary is it that you should become the bride of Christ after serious and careful deliberation. If you desire rearing love and constancy, look to Christ. There are in Jesus all the elements of love. Cru-

[illegible] sides his infinite tenderness. The speaker said he did not think it was well for any one to worry simply for the sake of worldly wealth, but given the great and good trains of intellectual and moral worth, the worldly goods were not objectionable. The reverend gentleman, in a very solemn and impressive manner, urged upon his hearers the importance of being joined in spiritual wedlock with Christ. The idea of entire renunciation of self was inferred to in the text. What would any one think of a young woman, who, when asked by a man to consent to marriage, should say, "Oh, yes, I will marry you, but you must kiss me, take me up my home or to leave my parents." [illegible] such circumstances would be something less than a man of the right spirit. The idea of marriage in that a woman shall renounce all home, friends, and country, if needful, for the man she gives herself to. So it should be when one listens to the wooing of the Spirit to Christ. There were, he said, several elements in love. One might, perhaps, be induced, under some circumstances, to marry a man on account of gratitude, but generally such marriages did not prove happy. But if to this were added the spirit of adoration, the loving of one for what he is in himself, then domestic bliss is secured.

[illegible] Sermon by Bishop Simpson.

[illegible] in the Eighteenth-Street [illegible] Methodist Episcopal Church and Sunday-school.

A very large audience gathered yesterday [illegible] Eighteenth-street M. E. Church, to hear Bishop SIMPSON preach. The Bishop read for his lessons the twenty-fifth Psalm and part of the tenth chapter of Romans. His text was from the second Psalm, eighth verse: "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost part of the earth for thy possession."

The two great lines of thought opened up before us in this chapter are, he said, first, the universal spread of Christianity, and the submission of the people to it; and, second, the fact that the governments and kingdoms of the earth are to be made to bow over which God has established his son Jesus on a throne and he sits waiting, expecting, until his enemies are made his footstool. But this great result must be wrought by men—by the children of His Church. What a responsibility rests upon us if God is thus waiting for man to do something for the spread of His kingdom, if His triumph can be gained through the actions of men. Christ's kingdom on earth is brought about by prayer of Christ rank of his people—"Ask of me," &c. Christ ever liveth to intercede. There is no man on earth for whom Christ does not intercede. The kingdoms of this world exalt themselves against Him to-day, not because He does not pray, but because we as members of His body do not unite heartily with Him. He has taught us that it is more important to pray for the coming and success of His kingdom than for our daily bread, to be guarded from temptation or delivered from sin. But how prayer then should be always a duty of scriptural geography, that we may see whether the armies of Immanuel have advanced here, been beaten back there, or have taken possession of islands and places elsewhere. God is opening up the world as fast as the Church is able to occupy it, as witness the political and civil changes in Spain, Italy, France, Mexico, China, India, and elsewhere. The Bible is freely circulated now in all those places where a few years ago it was a penal offense to be found distributing a single copy. He therefore called upon every one to do something to send the Gospel to those kingdoms. He did not think that money was given, but he was anxious that every one should give something.

Collections and subscriptions were then taken up, amounting in the aggregate to $1,054. The Sabbath-school Missionary Society held their meeting in the afternoon, and were addressed by Rev. A. D. VAIL and Rev. Dr. FOSS, and the sum collected by the children class, and handed in amounted, in the aggregate, to $112 06, of which the female department gave $47 50, and the male $64 56. The classes giving the largest amounts on the male side were No. 21, $9.10; Bible class, $6 05; and infant class, $8 60; and on the female side No. 5, $8; and No. 18, $4 65. The Superintendent announced that he came to add $5 to the largest of those sums. The total missionary collection, morning and evening, was $1,176.

Woman's True Position and Work in the Church—Sermon by Rev. H. D. Northrup.

Rev. H. D. NORTHUP, pastor of the Twenty-third-street Presbyterian Church, yesterday morning, preached a sermon by request on the subject of "Woman's True Position and Work in the Church." He selected as his text a portion of the eighth verse of the fourteenth chapter of Mark: "She hath done what she could." This, he said, was a eulogy, short, concise and complete, and that which she had done should be told as a memorial of her wherever this Gospel should be preached. It was not so much the value of the ointment poured on our Lord's head which made the deed praiseworthy as the spirit in which it was done. What matter how much little to others was to her a great deal, and following her example, women in the Church should do what they could within their proper sphere. What that proper sphere is, could only be learned from the Bible. It was plain that among the Jews and even in the early period of the Christian dispensation, there were women who were both prophetesses and active workers in the Church. The chief opponent of women's speaking in the Church was Paul, but even he plainly took a distinction between speaking and teaching. If at any of their religious meetings a sister felt impelled to pray or exhort, he would gladly welcome her, and even if she sought the duties of deacon, he would insist her as soon as he would any male member. In some of the other Christian denominations, such as the Methodist, she was permitted even to preach, but without authority. To this scheme of things men had not been unhappy ones, and that at the last moment their minds had been filled with noble and elevating sentiments. He concluded by expressing the hope that no true American would forget the services rendered by PAINE to this country, and that none would judge these men unheard.

Anniversary of a Presbyterian Missionary Society.

The fifteenth anniversary of the Sabbath-school Missionary Association of the Fourteenth-street Presbyterian Church was celebrated last evening. There was a very full attendance, Rev. E. W. HITCHCOCK occupying the chair. The Treasurer, Mr. A. C. ARMSTRONG, read his report for the year 1870, by which it appeared that the receipts amounted to $1,014, disbursements $1,008, leaving a balance in the treasury of $6. Since the formation of the Society, in 1856, $12,827 have been expended in promoting the objects of the association. The Manager's report was next read by the Secretary, Mr. EDWARD P. WALLING, in which it was stated that their Missionary, Mr. LEWIS, had reported favorably of the progress of the Society in the West.

Addresses were delivered by Rev. J. MONTGUILAGH and Rev. E. W. HITCHCOCK, the pastor.

The proceedings were varied by the singing of hymns under the direction of Mr. LUCIUS HART, the organist being Dr. T. F. ALLEN.

The following officers were elected for the year 1871: President, Mr. A. C. ARMSTRONG; Vice-President, Wm. T. Booth; Secretary, Edward P. Walling; Treasurer, Andrew F. Armstrong; Managers, N. D. Williams, J. C. Holden, Frederick A. Booth, Mrs. Dr. R. A. Barry, Mrs. J. H. Case and Miss Emma R. Judd.

Rev. Mr. HITCHCOCK made a stirring appeal for funds to sustain the missionary work, which was responded to by a liberal collection, after which the proceedings were brought to a close.

Homeless Upon the Streets—A Bed on the Sidewalks.

The "First Ward Lord Industrial School" have had many instances of suffering and destitution brought to their notice in the many years they have been in operation, but no one appealing so directly to the sympathies of the teachers as that which has claimed their attention during the past week. Attending the school are three young girls, sisters, their father and mother both intemperate and quarrelsome. On this account, and being unable to pay the rent, they were turned out of the little den they occupied in Washington-street, and with the only articles of furniture they possessed—a chair and an old straw bed—placed upon the sidewalk. The father found a warm place in one of the low groggeries that infest the lower part of the First Ward, while for two nights, strange as it may seem, the mother with her three children crowded upon their worn-out bed of straw, where it had been thrown by the pitiless landlord upon the sidewalk. While the great City slumbered, these little ones, dressed in their tattered garments, their arms bare and blue with the cold, were huddled together, with only an old quilt for a covering. The teachers of the school had the children supplied with warm food and better clothing, but were unable to do more for them on account of the besotted parent's being unwilling to have her children separated from her. What better fate then this for the advocates of temperance? What more terrible warning could be given to those whose feet are hurrying toward the drunkard's goal?

A Model Policeman—One of the New Appointments.

Early yesterday morning MICHAEL BOYCE, residing in the Eighth Ward, noticed a citizen in Grand-street, near Sullivan, engaged in searching another man. He crossed over to see the cause, when the searcher announced himself as a Police officer, and rather astonished Mr. BOYCE by arresting him on a charge of highway robbery. The officer proved to be somewhat intoxicated, and took his prisoner nearly to the North River end of the street before BOYCE detected him and effectually offered to show him the way to the Station-house located in Prince-street. When the two men arrived at Laurens-street they met an officer in uniform, to whom BOYCE appealed for protection, and followed the street of his unknown captor on a charge of personating an officer. At the Station-house the unknown announced himself as Officer JOHN MANGIN, of the Eleventh Ward, and stated that he had been knocked down in Division-street by a gang of ruffians who had robbed him of his and his shield of office. He insisted that BOYCE was one of the men engaged in the robbery, so the Sergeant had no alternative but to lock up the accused, especially as he had ascertained from the Eleventh Precinct that MANGIN was really a member of the Police force. Subsequent investigation led to the discovery that MANGIN had been on duty alone, and came into his own Station-house partially intoxicated, and was sent home by his superior officer. When MR. BOYCE was arraigned before Justice SHANDLEY, at the Jefferson Market Court, MANGIN was unable to identify him as one of the men who had robbed him, so the Magistrate discharged the accused. He, however, decided to lock up MANGIN, the policeman, for intoxication and disorderly conduct in the streets. The case will probably come before the Police Commissioners, and result in a vacancy in the force. MANGIN had been a Police officer scarcely six weeks.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

NEW-YORK.

Mr. HUGH HASTINGS, of the New-York Commercial Advertiser has commenced proceedings against JAMES and ERASTUS BROOKS, for publishing in the New-York Evening Express, Nov. 7, 1870, an alleged affidavit of a libel refraction which, it is charged, he signed nearly thirty years ago.

During the past week $2,949 21 were received at the North German General Consulate in aid of the victims in Germany of the Franco-German war, making, with the previous subscriptions, a total of $307,975 89. The contributions of last week include $500 by the German Aid Society in Cincinnati; $462 by the Germans of Belleville, Ill., (third contribution,) and $100 by the German Aid Society at La Grange, Mo.

CYRUS BUTLER, aged twenty-seven, a native of Brazil, was arraigned before Justice HOGAN yesterday, at the Tombs, to answer a charge of having effected a felonious entrance into the store of his employer, Mrs. ELIZABETH WINTERMUTE, of No. 14 Wand-street, who occupies the first floor of No. 8 Walker-street, as a clothing and scouring establishment. A door was forced on Friday night, and $100 worth of property, belonging to customers, carried off. When accused of the burglary BUTLER confessed his guilt, and agreed to restore the property, going away ostensibly for that purpose, but soon returned empty handed, and remarked that he "wouldn't give himself away." The Magistrate held the prisoner for trial, when he made an attempt to deny his guilt, simply stating that he would not pay for the property taken.

We desire to call the attention of the thinkers and scientific men of our City to the course of lectures to be delivered in Association Hall, by Rev. JAMES MCCOSH, D. D. LL. D., President of Princeton College. These lectures are on the Ely Foundation—"Evidences of Christianity"—of the Union Theological Seminary, and are looked forward to with great interest, it being understood that the doctor will take in hand the Huxley school of scientific men. His course last year in Boston on a kindred topic, attracted large audiences, and made a very strong impression upon that intelligent community. The lectures will be given on successive Monday evenings; the first, "The Relation of Physical Science to Religion," this evening at 8 o'clock.

At a regular meeting of the American Coterie, held Saturday evening, the following officers were elected: CHAS. NOELKE, President; Thos. McWatters, Vice-President; George E. Byde, Recording Secretary; F. V. Carter, Corresponding Secretary; John Lane Wemhiemer, Treasurer. After the installation, the retiring President was presented by the members with a magnificent gold-headed cane. The presentation speech was made by Sergt. JOHN SANDAZE. Mr. WEMHIEMER responded with grateful acknowledgment of the appreciation of his services by the members of the Coterie.

Mr. H. W. DEBEY's valuable paintings of the French, German and Belgian schools, are to be sold at auction, by Messrs. BANGS, STEPHENS & Co., at the Clinton Hall Art Galleries, on the evenings of Jan. 24 and 25. Among the paintings are choice examples by the following renowned artists: Kaulbach, Gallait, Merle, Alfred Stevens, Bougureau, Van Marcke, Chaplin, Rousseau, Marechal, Ed. Frère, Willems, Baron Leys, Koller, Koekkoek, Troyon, Tassaert, Lafon, Richter, Billet, Breton, Dias, Ziem, Deseille, Volts, and others.

Concordia Hall is the name of a new German club-house and ball-room in Avenue B, between Second and Third streets, which has been nearly completed, and is to be inaugurated during the present month. The building is five stories high and a mansard roof. It is forty-seven feet wide and 190 feet deep. The ball-room is 100 feet deep and forty-six feet wide. Three German societies—the Melomanen Society, the Theodor Koerner Ladertafel and the Marahner Maennerchor—will have their head-quarters in the new club-house.

An earnest appeal for funds for the endowment of Rutgers Female College has been issued by the committee appointed for this purpose, at a public meeting of citizens of New-York, held on June 6th last. The amount required is $100,000. A meeting in furtherance of the object is to be held this evening in the Chapel of Rutgers College, No. 489 Fifth-avenue, at 7½ o'clock.

The French Comité de Secours in this City, which was organized at the commencement of the war, to collect funds in aid of the wounded, is making arrangements for a general meeting of French residents, with a view of rendering an account of its operations, and terminating its functions. A committee, composed of messrs. VOYABLE, PARISOT and GAUDENS, has been appointed for that purpose.

Mlle. BOUSSON, who, since the commencement of the war, has been indefatigable in her efforts to collect goods and materials of comfort for the French wounded, is preparing another collection of goods, which will be forwarded in the Ville de Paris to the Comtesse DE FLAVIGNY, the Presidentess of the Comité Central de Secours in France. Goods intended for the wounded soldiers continue to be forwarded to her from the remotest parts of the country.

The Committee of the late French Ladies Bazaar have made a remittance to Mr. STAFFORD ALLEN, the Treasurer of the Society of Quakers in London, in the shape of a check for £3,877 4s. 8d., on Baring & Brothers, in aid of the suffering families inhabiting the districts in France which have been devastated by the war.

CHARLES N. BRACKETT, Esq., who was appointed by Mr. GRINNELL as Inspector of Customs, was on Saturday appointed Special Agent of the Treasury Department. Mr. BRACKETT was formerly Fire Marshal, and distinguished himself while in that office by his zeal in punishing incendiaries.

CHARLES FOX, steward of the steamer City of Norwalk, at Pier No. 28 East River, became temporarily insane yesterday afternoon, and leaped overboard. Officers GORMAN, HARWOOD and HUDSON, of the Harbor Police, succeeded in rescuing him from drowning.

JAMES FARRELL, thirty-two years of age, a resident of Astoria, while going to take the ferry-boat at the foot of East Ninety-third-street lost his way in the fog, last evening, and, walking overboard, was drowned. His body was not recovered.

BROOKLYN.

The Special Committee of the Board of Aldermen, to whom were referred for investigation the points at issue between the rival candidates for the seat for the Twenty-second Ward—WILLIAM RICHARDSON and JAMES VAN FELT TALMAGE—met on Saturday night, and took considerable evidence, the general effect of which was to show that Mr. RICHARDSON, the Republican, had not resided the two years required by law in the county, and was therefore ineligible to the Board. The Committee adjourned to report to the Board this afternoon.

The annual sermon before the Twenty-third Regiment was preached last night by Dr. CUYLER in the Lafayette-avenue Presbyterian Church. There was a very large attendance.

NEW-JERSEY.

A handsome building, and one of the most extensive buildings for manufacturing purposes in Newark, is being erected by FRANK E. LAMBOUS on Main-street, near the Ferry-street station on the Newark and New-York Railroad. The building is for the manufacture of trunks. It has a front of 135 feet on Main-street, running back to St. Francis-street. It is to be five stories high, has 70,000 square feet of floor surface, and will accommodate 800 workmen.

Rev. ALBERT BARNES, in his will, left $500 to be applied in yearly sums of $100 to the use of some poor student to be nominated by the Faculty of Princeton Theological Seminary. This, he says in his will, is done in consideration of the aid which he received when a student there, which amounted to $400.

Nearly every one of the departments of the Newark City Government has overdrawn its accounts, and shows a deficit. The city debt is already $1,400,000, and a bill is to be introduced into the Legislature authorizing the city to issue $500,000 in long bonds to meet outstanding debts and complete improvements now in progress.

A petition is in circulation in Hudson County asking for the establishment of a New-Jersey line between New-York and Jersey City. The terminus on the New-York side will be at the foot of Fourteenth-street. It is said that New-York capitalists are willing to furnish the entire capital.

Detective HAGGERTY, of the Newark Police force, yesterday arrested three men on suspicion of breaking into the residence of SAMUEL WILDS, of Montclair, on the night of Jan. 10. Their names are GEO. CAMPBELL, MORSE WILLIAMS and HOLLAND LEEZ. They are supposed to be accomplices with a gang who have been carrying things with a high hand in that village for several weeks.

The Grammar School at Rutgers College has introduced the system of topical lectures to the younger classes. Prof. EMILY is now delivering a course of lectures in Natural History in this way. The subject of the lecture is announced beforehand, and the scholars are invited to make themselves as familiar with the subject of the lecture as possible before it is delivered.

The town of Woodside, near Newark, is about to have the Newark water facilities extended to it. The fire-alarm telegraph will also be extended, and in case of a fire a portion of the Newark Fire Department will be called out. A new Town Hall will also be erected in the Spring.

Some boys, who unfortunately escaped arrest, broke some windows of a Newark and New-York railroad car, attached to a moving train, on Saturday night. They pelted the windows with stones, and a passenger was struck in the face and so badly injured as to require medical attendance.

ALBERT LITTLEWOOD, foreman in WM. BENTLY's jewelry factory, on Liberty-street, Newark, was terribly burned Saturday night by the explosion of a can containing benzine.
